THE GLEANER.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY.

From an address by Rev. J. D. McCabe, before the Literary Societies of Emory and Henry College.

The contests of this principle with arbitra-Ty power, are more distinctly marked since the dawn of the christian era! It is the voice of the Son of God, which ever since has been staking the despot's throne, and breaking the captive's chain. It was the blessed truths ut-tered by him to fishermen-to publicans and sinners, when he spoke upon the mountainin the market place-upon the heaving bosom of the sea of Galilee, which has ever since been struggling with oppression, and causing the pulse of freedom to throb wildly in the heart of the bondsman.

It was a sublime sight, to see that Great Teacher, standing in the midst of common peo-ple-the poor, the maimed, and the halt - and reating them as men, and litting their bowed and broken spirits, while the baughty rulers looked on with hate, feeling that their oraft was in danger, without exactly understanding the form in which the danger would come.--Why was it that this Teacher was both hated and feared ? He had no armies at his command- no pomp and circumstance of royal power adorned his person, or waited upon his sleps. But what need had he for any of these, when he was speaking words that burnt into the hearts of his hearere, and went forth for the healing of the woes of an oppressed hu-manity ? They were words of life and power, more dangerous than armed legions and glit-tering spears-more certain in their effects than the mightiest revolutions, guided by the statesman's prefeundest skill.

The citizen of Judea could say, 'I am a Jrw,' and the iron clad legionary, 'I am a Ro-man ;- it was Jesus of Nozareth who taught them to feel that they were men-that they were brethren-that they were free--that God was no respecter of persons—that each man was every other man's equal. He did not abolish the eternal distinctions between virue and vice. He did not sanction and establish a wild agrarianism, crushing the healthy and uecessary incentives to social distinction and vir-lue. He did not licence the abrogation of law and order. No ! He pointed to the checks and balances ordained of Heaven for the preserva-tion of true liberty, and its purest rational deopement. He was no disorganizer-no le-ler. Government he declared to be ordained of God, and obedience to that power neeal happiness. 'Reader unto Capar the things which are Capar's, and unto Got the things which are God's. The impulse was given --long and tedious was the conflict batwees inlong and tedious was the conflict between in-dividuality and consolidation—but the battle was nobly concested. The student of history traces its struggles as the miner veins of gold in the chrystalized rock. If sent mind out in pursuit of Truth—it struggled with oppressive forms and absolute power—it spoke in Wickliffe and ia Huss—in the Church and in the State it toil-ed much the church and in the State it toild, uaril, like elaven, it was diffused through the general mind. It wanted but a leader. Its roice penetrated the dark cell of a German monk, and a voice that is any other cause would scarcely have been heard beyond the limits of his monistery, shook the world. Lu-ther fired the train, and was startled by the blaze of the conflagration he had kindled.

From a New Orleans Paper. TAKING THE MISSISSIPPI.

TAKING THE DISSIGNT A. While Mr Sam. Stockwell, the artist, now ingaged on the great panorama of the Missis-ippi, in this city, was one afternoon slowly assume the river in his boat, a very up-comfortable shower came pattering down, at the moment he was about dropping anchor to aktech the picturesque establishment of a squat-ter. The backwell a moment, but finally let go and his boat swing around in the stream. 'Vot ish you going to pictat' him mit der He hesitated a moment, but finally let go tain ? enquired his German boatman.

No,' says Sam, ' but I'm going to pictur him mit the pencil. We are now about the hight spot to take a good view of that odd-looking cabin, and if we go we will lose it. So hand out the umbralla, and 1 will try a sketch. Perhaps by the time we finish our view, the hopietor will invite us to take some butter-

This old umbrella had, by certain vio'ent concussions received on the trip, become quite a curiosity. One half of the whalebones were goue, and, when it was hoised, it hung like a wobegone sombrero over its owner. The pitching of it carelessly into the boat, on sun-dry.

' You're an electioneer, are you ?' inquired the Squatter. No, not exactly,' said Sem; 'except in a small way for my own individual benefit. I am going to 'take the river"

Whar are you goin' to take it to ?' inquired the squatter. All around the country,' said Sam, ' and over to England.'

. Well, afore you kin do that, you'll have to get an awful big tub, and sot yourself at the mouth to draw it eff.'

'No, no,' says Sam, 'I am ' drawing it off' The squatter looked up and down the shore

The squatter looked up and down the shore two or three times, and should back : I don't see as it gets much lower-your suckin' machine draws it off dreadful slow.

· I am painting the Mississippi, my friend,' answered the artist. · Hev you got my cabin chalked down ?' he

'Hev you got my compared inquired, 'Yes,' answered Sam, ' and your too.' 'Good, by thander!' said the squatter; when you show me to them Inglish fellers, jest tell'em I'm a Mississippiscreamer-I can hoe tell'em I'm a Mississippiscreamer. more corn in a day than any Yankee machine ever invented, and when I bit anythin' from a bullock down to human natur', they ginerally think 'lightnin' is comin'.

Are you a Taylor man ?' inquired Sam.

" No, by thunder ? says he. " Do you go in for Cass then ?' inquired Sam.

"Well, I calculate net, stranger,' shouted "What ! do you ' support' Van Buren ?' continued the artist. 'No sir,' shouted the screamer; 'I'sup-port' Beteey and the children; it's — tight screwin to get along with them, with corn at only twenty five cents a bushel.' 'Good bye, stick to Betsey and the children' there is the best candidates out,' said Sam ; ' they are the best candidates out,' and raising the anchor, he floated off.

As he floated onward the squatter's voice reached hum once more, and its burthen was: ' Rurtah for Gineral Jackson, the eld Missis-sippi, and ME AND BET-EY !'

From the London People's Journal. WE'VE ALL OUR ANGEL-SIDE.

Despair not of the " better part" That lies in human kind ; A gleam of light still flickereth

In e'en the darkest mind. The savage with his club of war,

The sage so mild and good, Are linked in firm, eternal bonds

Of common brotherhood. Despair not ! oh, despair not then, For thro' this world so wide,

No nature is so dæmon-like. But there's an angel-side.

The huge rough stones from out the mine,

Unsightly and unfair, Have veins of purest metal hid Beneath the surface there.

Few rocks so bare, but to their heights Some tiny moss-plant clings, And round the peaks most desolate The ses-bird soars and eings.

Believe, me too, that rugged scals, Beneath their rudeness hide

Much that is good and beautiful :---We've all our angel-side.

In all there is an inner depth, A far off secret way-

Where, through dim windows of the soul God sends his smiling ray.

In every human harp there is

A faithful sounding cord, That may be struck unknown to us. By some sweet loving word 1

The wayward heart in vain may try Its softer thoughts to hide Some unexpected tone reveals It has its angel-side

Despised, and low, and trodden down-

Despised, and how, and routen to Dark with the shade of sin ; Deciphering not those halo-lights Which God hath lit within Groping about in primost night,

Oh, that some gentle hand of love Their sumbling steps would guide t Asd show them that amidst it all, Lite has its angel-side.

Brutal and coarse, and mean enough, Bat He, compassionate, lice near, Aad shall we stand afar 1 Our "cruse of oil" will not grow less If shared with hearty hand, words of peace, and looks of love, No nature can withstand ! Love is the mighty conqueror-Love is the beateous guide-Love with her beaming eyes can see We've all our angel-side.

ON EDUCATION. Mr Editor. To overcome the inertia of the mind-to start it into action, and to sustain it therein, there must be, in the first place, the application of a strong propelling force; and, in the se-cond place, there must be an usdiminished-if not an increasing-exercise of 11; otherwise it will soon sink into its patural passiveness, and come to a 'state of rest.' Now, all these re-quisites, I confess, have been supplied by that quisitee, 1 confers, have been supplied by that irresistible 'Appeal' from a 'Gaspe Teacher' which I recently encountered in the columns of your paper of the 27th ult.; and, to its im-perishable henor let it be recorded, that if it has not produced the wished-for effect on the obtuse facings of the Canadians, it has goaded the heart of a New Brunswicker, and pointed the merciless arrow of examination inwards However, 1 must say, that the hearts of the <sup>4</sup> People of Gaspe' must be as hard as the gra-nite of which Pompey's Pillar is composed, if they remain inexotable after having been pathos—aye, and kindled with such melting pathos—aye, and kindled with a text from the 'wisest man'—and such a text, too ! But, Sir, I am departing from my original design, and ough to make an apology for it; yet I could But refere from the during in the during in not refrain from indulging aloud my admiration of the 'sublimely' little sermon, and from paying a passing eulogy to its 'departed shades,' and a tribute to the memory of its noble-hearted author. But to my work.

The subject of Elementary Education is, at present, engrossing a greater share of public attention than it has hitherto received, and is assuming an important feature in the age in which we live. This is a truth almost univer-sally acknowledged; and it is practically de-monstrated in all civilized countries where the legitimate action of the reasoning faculties, with which maskind are endowed, is not legally prohibited-where ignorance is not legali-zed-where legal enactments do not restrain the ever-active mind of man from wending its way to the Terople of Knowledge. It is a truth that is not confined to our own happy that that is not connect to our own happy shores, but it is prevalent throughout the bound-less expanse of christendom. It is discussed in the ranks of the humble, and the voice of eloquence has advocated its cause in the halls of legislation. The Parent, the Teacher, the Guardian, and the Legislator—all concur that constitue much the docation of the form something must be done to premote the effica-cy of our Common Schools, and are already starting from their apathy to facilitate and hasten the completion of the magnanimous work: for noble isdeed it is. Those who have drunk abundanly of the waters of the Fountain of Knowledge, and they who weep over the pri-vation of a draught in early years-are mingling together their several energies in the advancement of the common interests of a common object; the former animated by the bles. sings they have experienced from the vivilying influence of the luscious draught-the latter urged by a motive equally powerful, to secure for their offspring and fellow creatures those for their offspring and fellow creatures those blessings, the privation of which they now poignantly (sel, and in which their bitter re-flections tell them they are forever precluded from the possibility of participation; those leading the army, contending in the van, and intellectually striving with the sullen and per-verse powers of ignorance and bigotry; these, as pioneers, levelling the way, and acting a subordinate part towards the destruction of that fails includes which has for access failed and fatal incubus which has, for ages, fettered the minds of countless multitudes in the dark, do!eful and noxious cells of bigoted ignorance. dorent and noxious cells of bigoted ignorance, and its which the intellects of myriads have. like plauts secluded from the vital action of a pure atmosphere, and the light of a meridian sun, vegetated in debility, existed in sickliness, and drooped beneath a poisoned constitution; but which might otherwise have arrived at a vigorous maturity, shed a fusirons halo around their secula shere and their secure of the their social sphere, and their possessors, after having filled the chalice of their existence here, might have retired from the theatre of their active life, to dwell in honor and veneration in the memories of their successors

Let us now, for a moment, throw our range of vision across the dark and wide-eprend wa-ters of the Atlantic, and take a brief, retros-pective survey of the state of Elementary Esucation among some of the diversified nations of Europe, at a period of some fifty years ago.

Towards the close of the last century, and for a long period, the friends of virtue and hu-manity were grieved to see the waters of the Fountain of Wisdom sipped by fortune's fa-vored lew, while millions of sentient and intelligent beings were denied the blessings of a draught from the humblest streamlet. They cast their eyes around and gazed on the moral and intellectual wilderness-a melancholy spectacle of human degradation; they saw no friend of public humanity entering the dismal wilds; they heard no human voice pouring forth its joyful sounds of philanthrophy amid the dense groseness of nature, and their hearts melted within them. Sadly did they ask themserves why the most noble attributes of so many of their fellow creatures were thus left to pine beneath the privation of appropriate aliment. With regret they considered that the first cause of the evils which too often corrupt and degrade a portion of our fellow creatures proceeds from the neglected state in which their childhood is left ; they conceived the le gitimate hope of arresting the stream of demoralisation by obtaining a more virtuous, ex-tended, and fruitful means for the development of the intellectual and moral nature of the hualike for learning and humanity, and at the althe for learning and humanity, and at the same time animated by that pure and generous zeal which is ever inseparably allied with true, learning, arose like the morning sun, to expel the darkness of a long and dreary night, and set out in the philanthrophic career. They evolved and practised that system which was best calculated to remedy the mournful evils, and uncert that investigation and the system which was and impart that instruction most suitable to the children who attended the Common Schools. In some countries these laudable efforts were warmly responded to and aided by the Gov-eraments. In others, voluntary associations were seen to assume this touching mission; and persons of affluence realized around them their fortunes, and devoted them to the cause, to give impulse and stability to the agency already at work.

From that time the reform that then began gradually and steadily progressed; the dark-ness of men's minds gradually disappeared, and gave place to enlightened views, towards the adoption of a more fruitful and systematic procedure to diffuse and foster a thorough Primary Instruction. At that time were sown the seeds of that system which has since expanded and grown to maturity-which has since been adopted and nurtured by various nations, and towards which the hand of invitation is still extended.

France was the last of the Continental pations that participated in the general move-ment; although it was she perhaps, who, by her writers, gave the first hint; and by her central situation and rank among the enlightened nations of Europe, she seemed peculiarly called upon to give the example. However, on account of the various and successive political events that agitated and distracted her at that period, and also owing to the instability of her political institutions, the successive Governments were not able to give sufficient attention to as improvement which required long and steady efforts. To England, then, we are indebted for the origin of practical improveare indebted for the origin of practical improve-ment. She began in earnest the eligible work, and speedily was the copy waited across the Straits of Dover; thence with equal rapidity did it apread throughout the greater part of Continental Europe. Still, unwearied with her redeeming work, the Goddess of Educa-tional Reformation urged onward the progress of her benevolent mission, till she stood on the confines of the Indian Ocean, and spread her banner of benevolence over India and the adjacent Islands. In her noble career she seemed as if devoted to the Oriental mission, and parwas the abode of her spirit there. Long did she perambulate the catacombs of intellectual mortality, striving to vivify the lifeless mass. forgetting apparently that the same vivilying influence of her spirit was needed on the Western shores of the Atlantic; forgetting that the Province of New Brunswick was suffering beneath the sluggish pressure of the super-incumbent mass of accumulated and accumula-ting evils; forgetting that a deadly chill was rapidly shedding its paralyzing influence over our Educational Institutions, and hastening them to a common grave.

At length, however, she turned her eyes, streaming with compassion, towards the far-distant West, and beheld the decolation. Her benignant heart bade her undertake the mission, and soon she was seen slowly and gradu-ally approaching our shores. She arrived, but at a critical time indeed. It was at the eleventh hour. But as Dr. Johnson has said, "refor-mation is never hopeless," she did not despair. although the case was deeperate. She knew well where the work ought to begin, and wise-ly infused the Spirit of Reformation into our legislators, but I fear left them imperfectly en-lightened into the just and only way to sustain and promote it

However, the sinking of our Primary Schools However, the sinking of our Finnery Scholar has been arrested, but the gatherings of years cannot be dissipsted in one. Time, activity, and the united energy of all are needed to fa-cilitate and complete the work. One of there, minus the rest, the work will fall short of con-summation. The Teachers themselves, resummation The Teachers themselves, re-gretting their past remissness, are now step-ping torward to abet the reforming movement, ping totward to abet the reforming intovenial, to give greater amplitude to the advantages of our Elementary Schools, and to guard the Profession from the encreachments of indivi-duals who are wholly unsuitable to be entrust-ed with that which is so vitally important, viz: the Education of Youth.

Hitherto the admission of the most incom-petent persons to the office of Teachers has been, in our School system, a fruitful source of evils of an enormous magnitude, and of multi-form complexion; and how much seever Pa-rents and Trustees may have deploted the small amount of good realised from these institutions, they may also add this bitter re-flection, that they and they alone have been the primary cause of it, issesmuch as they have by their penoriousness, encouraged and in-creased the number of incompetent applicants, and by their laxity perpetuated the destructive system. But it is to be hoped, for the benefit system. But it is to be hoped, for the benefit of all, that the fag end of this evil fraught sys-tem of things has arrived, and that a better and brighter course is about to commence: To watch over, guard and promote the in-terests and prosperity of our Common Schools, then, is one of the prominent objects of the Teachers' Association. This duty has been hitherto deposited in the hands of a body of men denominated 'Trustees of Schools' Trustees, or, to give it a more intelligible name, Guardians of Schools is a strange term when associated in the mind with the duties their office imposes upon them, and the manner their office imposes boon them, are the maner in which they have all along administered their grardianship. It is one of the many incompre-hensible anomalies which are often met with on this earth of oddities. But how they (with throughout Europe, and men distinguished a few exceptions, have discharged their anties, occasions, had introduced ill-shaped sky. Reta in its root; and taken altogener, it was the sorriest apology for shelter, ever stretched over a sovereign citizen of the United States. Sam, Sam, however, worked away beneath the Ringham' until he finished his sketch. All this time an affluent from the top of his cance-like Covering poured a flood of dark tinged water throat through one of the holes, and down his neck. His German watched this stream with intense aterest, as if calculating how much the artist's clothes would hold before they would leak .--When he had finished, George, the German, broke forth in admiration. Well, for a little mans you soaks more va-der the forth in a little mans you soaks more va-
