

of civil and religious liberty to the British Empire.

That the following prelates and members of the Legislature a committee to define with accuracy the objects which are to occupy the association; to frame the rules and regulations by which it shall be governed, and to submit the same to the next general meeting of the association.

That the committee be charged to prepare and publish an address to the Catholics of the United Kingdom, on the present position of Catholic affairs.

That the most sincere and heartfelt thanks of this meeting are hereby tendered to the venerable prelate, who has in so distinguished a manner presided over our deliberations."

THE RIOTS, &c.

At ten minutes before eleven o'clock, the Rev. T. D. Gregg left Morrison's Hotel, accompanied by Mr Henry Cooke, Mr Shea, and Mr Walbrook, in a carriage and pair, for "The Aggregate Meeting of Catholics." In a short time his carriage was recognised, and attracted a mob who ran after it. Arrived at the gate leading into the Rotunda, the Rev. Gentleman and his friends alighted, amid the deafening applause of their friends, presented their tickets and demanded admittance, which was refused. The Rev. T. D. Gregg, on this said:

"Then I pronounce your meeting a packed meeting of Papists and not Catholics, in which is violated every principle of law and order."

Mr Henry Cook also said, "And I do the same."

Mr Gregg and his friends then returned to their carriage, the windows of which were instantly shivered, while the coachman was struck with a stone which injured him severely in the jaw. However the carriage succeeded in driving off amid a volley of stones, and proceeded up Great Denmark street, followed by an immense mob of coal-porters, to Mountjoy-square West, the house of Mr Shea, at which point their pursuers were completely distanced. After a short stay there the Rev. Gentleman proceeded to Kingstown. The police arrangements, it is said, were so ineffective, that had it not been for the speed of the horses, the inmates of the carriage would, in all probability have been murdered, and a bloody fracas might have taken place between the opposing parties.

The Reverend Gentleman was from first to last groaned lustily by the coal porters, while he was enthusiastically cheered by his friends.

Around the Rotunda, both previous to the arrival and after the departure of the Rev. Mr Gregg, the greatest excitement prevailed, and the collisions between the police and the coal porters and dock laborers were frequent, stones and staves being freely used on either side. The demolition of glass was on an extensive scale, the windows of the Priests' Protection Society, of the Church Sentinel office, and other buildings, obnoxious to the gentlemen who enjoyed this saturnalia, being demolished.

Business was completely suspended along the line of quays, and all the vessels in the river presented a most extraordinary appearance, being decorated with every flag they possessed, from the union jack to the ensign. This was in accordance with the imperative commands of the coal porters, who were masters for the time of all that portion of the city. All the men in the employment of the steam companies struck work at an early hour, and proceeded in a body through the Custom House docks, where the numbers were swelled by the addition of the laborers and porters who had been working there, and not one of whom was either unwilling or dared to disobey their summoning.

This very formidable body, every man being armed with stick or staff, then proceeded to the Rotunda, where, on their arrival, they took up a fixed position, which they retained during the day. It is supposed that in Sackville street, Cavendish row, and the immediate vicinity of the meeting, there were at the least one hundred thousand people assembled.

All the shops in Sackville street, West-morland street, College street, and, in fact, in all the streets leading to the Rotunda, were closed, every appearance of business being suspended. A body of five hundred of the metropolitan police were stationed in the Rotunda Gardens in readiness for any emergency. About three hundred horse and foot police likewise patrolled the streets in the vicinity of the meeting, and the military were all under arms.

The crowds in the streets had somewhat dispersed about five o'clock.
