AGRICULTURE.

Many experiments in cutting wheat at different times, from quite green until dead ripe go to show that from twelve to four-teen days before the latter period, gives the plumbest heaviest, thinnest skinned and most nutritive grain. The loss in weight by standing is nearly 15 per cent, and the loss by increase of bran, in equal weights, nearly 4 per cent. It is at this period the grain is in the milk, "there is but little woody fibre: nearly everything is starch glutten, sugar, &c., with a large per centage of water. If cut then, the proportion of woody fibre is still small; but as the grain ripens, the thickness of the skin rapidly increases, woody fibre being formed at the expense of the starch and sugar; these must obviously diminish in a corresponding degree, the quality of the grain being of course injured.'

from growing in the ear.

The proper stage of maturity for cutting is when the stalk immediately below the head for two or three inches, has become yellow and dry, consequently cutting off the circulation, and the grain, though soft and doughy, ceases to yield any milk upon pressure. This occurs about a formight before the seed becomes dead ripe.

In early harvesting greater attention must be given to the curing and drying of the grain. It is advisable to allow it to dry a half day or so in the swath before binding and then small bundles only should be allowed. It should be shocked up before the dew falls, and will need to stand there for a longer period than if cut later. Should no rain occur, setting up the sheaves in a double row with the heads resting against each other, is a good one. Against heavy showers, however this gives but little protection nor is covering shocks formed in the same manner, with sheaves laid on horizontally, the heads touching each other. The best modeis to set up half a dozen sheaves in a compact form, covering them with two others, broken in the middle and laid on the form of a cross, with the ends spread out, which affords a perfect and reliable cap for the shelter for the grain beneath from the usual storms of the season.

Extract of a Letter from Mr S. Gowen, Che mist, of Clifton, near Bristol, dated July 14th

To Profossor Holloway,
Dear Sir—I am requested by a Lady named Thomas, just arrived from the West Indies, to acquaint you that for a period of eight years
herself and family suffered from continual bad health, arising from disorders of the Liver and Stomach, Indigestion, loss of Appetite, violent Head-aches, pains in the side, weakness and general debility, for which she consulted the most eminent men in the colony, but without any beneficial result; at last, she had recourse to your invaluable Pills, which in a very short time effected so great a change for the latter that the color of the latter than the latter than the color of the latter than the color better, that she continued them, and the whole family were restored to health and strength afflicted for a long time with violent spasmo-dic pains in the stomach and liver, arising from frequent colds, smells of paint, and the effects of a stooping position which he had bliged to assume in his business. The opasins were of an alarming character, and effects of your invaluable Pills, and was induced to give them a trial. The first doze gave him considerable relief, and by following them up in accordance with your directions, they have acted so wonderfully in cleansing the liver and stomach, and strengthing the

The value of the straw as food for animals is also much enhanced by early cutting.

A saving of gain is also made, the waste from shelling is avoided. This loss is often large in fully ripe wheat.

The loss from rust will, in most cases be prevented by early harvestiag. This disease generally makes its appearance at about that stage of growth recommended for cutting the grain, and when ever it does appear its injuries can at once be checked by immediate harvesting.

NUTRITIVE QUALITIES OF CHARCOAL.

Though the importance of mixing charcoal with the food of animals, particularly that of swine, has been generally acknowledged and we benefits extensiveley tested, still it has been supposed that it only acted as a corrective to the noid tendency of food and facilitated fattening by improving the health of the animal. some experiments would seem to show that charcoal acts a more important part in the matter.
