

day night, by a man named James O'Donnell who keeps a tavern and grocery in Albermarle-street. The soldier it appears being absent from the Barracks on leave, about 11 o'clock at night entered the house mentioned, and asked for liquor, which was refused by O'Donnell's wife. O'Donnell being in bed—She was then asked to change a seven-pence half-penny, and when handing over the change, the soldier insisted that he had given her the piece of silver, which she denied. A dispute arose. The soldier became so violent that she was obliged to call her husband—O'Donnell forcibly ejected the soldier, when the latter struck at O'Donnell with a walking stick which he carried. O'Donnell wrenched the stick from the soldier, and struck with it the blow or blows which caused the death of the latter. The skull was broken,—and the flow of blood upon the brain was the immediate cause of death.

After receiving the injury, the soldier, walked by himself to a house in Barrack street, and for some time seemed in no danger but he died next morning.

The Coroner's court was engaged investigating the matter from 2 o'clock until half past seven yesterday afternoon, when the jury returned a verdict that O'Donnell struck the deceased in self-defence.—Halifax Colonist.
