RUSSIAN CASUALTIES.—From Odessa the accounts describe the death silence that reigns in that part, and the universal misery that exists.

From the Sea of Azoff we learn that the greater part of the Russian merchant fleet was destroyed by the hurricane of the 14th of November.

From Kertch the accounts are similar. Near Odessa several detachments of Russian infantry and cavalry have perished from cold.

P. E. ISLAND.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—Mr. Thomas Robins, of Bedeque, two of his sisters, and Miss Eliza Johnston, of New London, left home for a sleigh drive, down the ice to Summerside, where they spent the evening, leaving again at half-past eight on their way home; through the darkness of the night, they lost their way, and drove out of the Harbour until they got outside the Bar, and were all plunged into an opening, twelve feet wide, and from thirty to forty yards in length, covered with snow and slightly frozen. The young man being active, and a good swimmer, seeing one of his sisters sinking, he put his arm round her body, and with the other arm, swam to sound ice, where she held till her brother got out and assisted her also, he then lay down and reached the seat of the sleigh, that had floated off to his other sister, who caught hold—when he had taken her out—nearly exhausted, he then endeavoured to rescue Eliza Johnston, who was all the time holding by the ice, at the other side of the opening, thinking the ice was stronger a short distance round, he attempted to cross, and fell in, after recovering himself, he saw something in the water, supposing Eliza Johnston was sinking, he immediately sprang into her assistance, she was gone, he found nothing but a loose cloak. Getting out the third time, leaving the horse to his fate, he pursued his sisters, who had left, after overtaking them, he observed a light, taking that for their guide, they kept on for a short distance, when the eldest sister gave up; leaving her, he proceeded on with the other, as she was also insensible, the alarm was soon given, and from fifty to sixty men were on the ice in search of those missing, the sufferers knew not where they had been, and they could give no direction; the men parted different ways, searching the ice all night. At day light, the body of Ann Robins was found about a mile from the opening, and two miles from Summerside, and Eliza Johnston under the ice, hanging by her clothes, which kept her from sinking. A Coroner's Inquest was held on the bodies of the deceased, when the Jury returned a verdict accordingly.—Hazard's Gazette.

CANADA.

Result of the Trials.—The Jury in the case of Hearn, Giblin and Burns, accused of the assault upon Gavazzi, on Saturday, after four hours' deliberation, returned a verdict finding John Hearn guilty of a simple assault, and acquitting the other defendants.

The Court very probably characterised the offence of which Hearn has been found guilty of one of a most heinous tendency, and deserving of severe punishment. We presume, therefore, that the guilt brought home to the prisoner will receive a measure of chastisement commensurate to the character of his crime.

Change in the Cabinet.—No less than three of the lower Canadian member of the Administration on Saturday resigned office, namely Messrs. Chabot, Chauveau, and Morin. Mr Chabot was offered a Judgeship in the Superior Court, but declined accepting it, and retires into private life being succeeded in the Chief Commissionership of Public Works by Mr Lemieux. Mr Chauveau, it is said, considered the distribution of appointments to the Bench unjust towards him, and therefore abandoned the Secretariat in disgust,—he is to be replaced by Mr Cartier. The Crown Lands department became vacant by Mr Morin's acceptance of the appointment of Judge of the Superior Court, and is to be filled by Mr Cauchon.

Judicial Appointments.—The vacancies in the Court of Queen's Bench, caused by the demise of Judge Panet and the resignation of Mr Justice Roland, are to be supplied by the promotion of Judges Duval and Caron, from the Superior Court. Mr Morin is to be one of the new Superior Court Judges, and Mr Bagley the other.
