

In consequence of the receipt of the affair of the 5th of November, the empress has had a serious and even alarming relapse. The courier found the empress in the apartment of the empress, awaiting the news with feverish impatience, and when the truth was declared to him he could not restrain his feelings, but broke out into the strongest expression of dissatisfaction and anger against his generals and his army. One exclamation which escaped him respecting his sons greatly alarmed the empress, who was aware that they were with the army at Sebastopol; she feared that some terrible calamity had befallen them, seeing the agitation of her husband, and she fainted away. She remained for some time insensible; and it was with much difficulty that the Emperor and the attendants succeeded in restoring her to animation. She became more calm when informed that nothing had occurred to her sons; but her health has seriously suffered from the shock caused by the defeat of the army at Inkermann, and she has now to struggle against an increase of debility and a low fever. The greatest alarm is felt for her, and her recovery is considered very doubtful indeed.
