

Lake Navigation.—Receipt of Flour from the West.—Extract of a letter received in this city, dated, Buffalo, March 11.—“We have felt the severity of the winter here, having had sixty-eight successive days of snow and freezing, and much of the time the mercury has been below zero. The prospect now is that March will not be a warm month, but cold and snowy. If it be so, it is not probable that Lake Erie can be open for navigation earlier than the 15th May, and I do not think it possible it can be opened sooner than 1st May, even if it should be warm through March, which is not now probable. This will make our receipt of Flour and Grain from the West, much larger than usual.”

Sale of Flour.—We noted a sale yesterday of 2000 barrels of flour, to go out of the market at $6 per barrel. This is a large decline on prices that prevailed of late.—Louisville Courier, March 9.

From Teneriffe.—Dated from Santa Cruz, Teneriffe, to Jan. 20, state that the winter in the island had been terrible. Rain had fallen incessantly for more than a month, and on the 7th of January there was a fearful hurricane, which did much damage to buildings and shipping. At Garachio, the waves were so high that the sea encroached upon the land, and swept through the streets. Monastery was destroyed and two of the monks were buried in the ruins. A bark from Gomera was lost with ten men.

MEXICO.

Vera Cruz, Feb. 22 1856.—We have had in this city for the last eight days a mucho fandango, which may liberally be translated a regular shindy. Of all the singular revolutions, pronunciamientos, battles, street fights &c., which Mexico can boast of, the one which has just come off here, between the castle of Ulloa and the city, bears the palm. About ten days ago a certain gentleman named Salcedo was confined as a prisoner in the castle for some political crimes. This Salcedo has never heretofore been of much note, having first figured as a partizan, then as a guerrilla chief, and then by regular promotions, he became an officer in the army. Not satisfied with the aspect of the political horizon, he tried to raise a breeze, and having failed, he was apprehended and imprisoned. Finding no doubt, some of his former companions among the faithful guardians of the fortress, he succeeded on the 13th inst., in seducing them from their duty. They liberated him from his confinement, imprisoned their officers, and sent a message over the harbour to the city intimating that it did not surrender in twelve hours the inhabitants would be fired upon. Next morning some shot were sent over the town, and afterwards some balls took effect on the churches, private buildings and other places. As the castle is on an island, there was not much danger of the hostile forces coming to close quarters and as the citizens and foreigners were likely to suffer more than the garrison a meeting of the foreign Consuls took place, while the women and children were being hurried into the country. A French frigate, the Penelope, happened to be here at the time, and a formal request was made to the captain by the Consuls to interpose and save from destruction the property and the lives of foreigners in the city. They stated that, however much the hostile fort might be disposed to battle with each other, it was contrary to humanity and the rules of modern warfare that an unprotected city should be involved in the calamity. The Governor of the place also asked the captain of the Penelope for his interference, and thus solicited he agreed to put a stop to further outrage.

The frigate was lying down at Sacrificos, an island about five miles distant, whence the captain immediately proceeded to get his vessel under weigh, to come up under the castle. He requested the Commodore of the Mexican fleet to join him, but that valiant commander having more dread of the castle than fear of punishment before his eyes, backed out from escorting the Frenchman under the guns of Ulloa. The Mexican steamers, therefore, remained out of range while the frigate sailed into port, close under the walls of the castle. A boat immediately put off from the castle to the ship, to enquire the intentions of the French man-of-war. The captain gave them but little satisfaction, as he intimated that he was not disposed to answer inquiries; but that if they did not cease firing upon the defenceless inhabitants he would take the castle and hang the inmates as pirates. This decisive step prevented the further destruction of private property; but the war went on. Some of the gentlemen in the castle went on board the Penelope to escape from the consequence of their folly; and at the request of the Governor they were sent back. A proposal was then made to surrender to the Governor of the city on condition of pardon, employment, and being suitably rewarded. But Gen. Llave refused to entertain the proposition, and finally after some dozen lives were lost, including a dog and a donkey, the garrison surrendered at discretion after eight days of fighting.

During the affair the shipping in the harbor hurried out to sea and anchored down at Jacatigos. A few hours after the matter was ended the steamer Texas arrived from New Orleans and was alone in the port, not knowing what had happened until she sent a boat on shore with the mails. The Texas was the first arrival since the publication of the new tariff, and the passengers were consequently saved from all the vexations and visits of the port officials, who always heretofore have kept them waiting to make their examinations and issue their permits for landing. Now passengers can go on shore without a permit or passport and take their baggage with them. Heretofore the rules were the same as at Havana; now they are as liberal as at New Orleans. Passports are abolished. The valiant Mexican Commodore has been suspended from command by the Governor; and Salcedo, with five or six more to keep him company, will be shot. The people here are indignant at the outrage of Salcedo, while the city seems to be more unanimous in favor of the present government of Comonfort.

From present appearances the petty revolutions in the interior are nearly ended. Haro y Tamniz still holds out at Puebla, but no one supposes he can be successful. He has had to concentrate his force within the city, while all the country around is hostile to his cause. Destitute of resources, he has exacted a forced loan of $180,000 of the inhabitants, which shows that his position is desperate. Uruga is a fugitive in the Sierra, and the troops from all quarters are concentrating to surround Haro at Puebla. The liberal policy of Comonfort seems to give general satisfaction, except to the priests and the small remnant of the regular army still remaining. Everywhere the National Guards have sustained the President, and everywhere, on the least opportunity, the regular troops have proved treacherous. Necessity is forcing the ruling party to get rid of the army, while necessity alone dictates what they would not otherwise perceive, that the destruction of the army is the only safety.

At this time, finding medical assistance unavailing, the mother boldly determined to have recourse to Holloway's Pills, which she commenced using, after the first week, the improvement was so decided, that she determined to continue them, and by persevering for two months with the treatment laid down by Professor Holloway, the mother had the satisfaction of once more seeing her daughter restored to health, although her life had been previously despaired of.
