

London, June 5—7.

POSTSCRIPT.—Last night were received Paris and Dutch papers; the former down to the 31st ult. The latter to the 4th instant. The articles of most importance contained in them are, one from Augsburg, and another from Vienna. The former states, that ten battalions of Austrian troops had set out from Zeng, in Dalmatia, to occupy the Mouths of the Cattaro, and the contiguous posts, previous to the surrender of them to the French. The intelligence from Vienna mentions, that Brannau is not to be delivered up to the Austrians until positive advices shall be received that the French are in possession of Cattaro. General Bellegarde is the person to perform the ceremony of the formal acceptance and surrender of that important post.

The Austrian Government has at length had the prudence to make that addition to its regular military establishment, which, if it had been adopted sooner, would have prevented Bonaparte from crossing the Danube at Vienna. Corps of armed citizens are every where embodying and disciplining throughout the Austrian States. The force of this description amounts to twenty thousand men; and it is expected, that, in a short time, four hundred thousand men of the same kind will be under arms. The great genius of the Archduke Charles, from whom we presume, the plan proceeds, could not have struck out any system more likely to raise the fallen fortunes and honor of his House. If his active and suspicious enemy, but allow this force to be organized and disciplined, in addition to the efforts which are known to be making to recruit the regular army, the result of the first campaign, whenever war revives between AUSTRIA and FRANCE, will neither be so rapid, nor decisive as the last.—This volunteer army, as it may be properly called, is intended to form "a second line of defence." It is obvious, that the military strength of Austria will be greatly increased by this plan. It is mentioned as a report from Brussels, that the Emperor Napoleon is not expected there until the termination of the grand military fête at Paris, which, it is said, will not be protracted beyond the end of the present month.

The first salutation of Louis Bonaparte, as King of Holland, probably took place at Paris on Sunday last. A levee of peculiar splendour was to be held by Napoleon, for the purpose of receiving the Batavian Deputation, the Members of which were afterwards to be admitted to an audience of Prince Louis. The Sovereignty of Holland was very probably tendered to him in that interview. The intention of receiving the Deputies at the levee, is a proof that all the difficulties respecting the new Constitution were expected to be removed.

King Joseph made his triumphal entry into Naples on the 10th ult. The pompous and fulsome accounts of the procession, and of the enthusiastic loyalty of the population of the Capital, will be found under their proper heads.

A letter of rather a curious tenor appears in the French papers; it purports to be from the Arch-Treasurer of the Empire to the Chamber of Commerce at Genoa. In it he advises the merchants of that once flourishing town, "to transfer, in case the enemy should shut the sea against them, all their commercial speculations to France. He even throws an indirect censure upon them and their forefathers, for having wasted so much of their wealth upon the rocks of Liguria; or, according to his expression, "for having encumbered the soil with unproductive palaces."

General Andreoffy, it appears, has not definitively quitted the Austrian territory. He was lately sent by Berthier on a special mission to Vienna. It is not improbable but he may again return to Dalmatia, for the purpose of superintending the surrender of Cattaro.

One of the French frigates, La Comete, which escaped from Admiral Duckworth, has got into St. Sebastians, in a very distressed state.

New incorporations are spoken of in Westphalia: the territories of Prince Joachim are to be augmented with the Duchy of Arenberg and Croy.

The port of Memel is so closely blockaded by the Swedes, that some shot have been fired from the fortifications at the boats belonging to one of their frigates.

NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

The following was yesterday stuck up at Lloyd's:—

"The frigates arrived in the West Indies are supposed to be the following, which sailed from L'Orient, on the 27th of March, viz. Guerier, 48 guns, 24-pounders; Revanche, 44 guns, 18-pounders; Sirene, 44 guns, 18-pounders; Felicite, 44 guns, 18-pounders.

"The Nearque corvette sailed in company with the above, and was captured by the Niobe frigate."

GRAND BREW-HOUSE DINNER.

The entertainments given last year by Alderman Combe, at his Brew-house, the one to the Prince of Wales, and the other to the Duke and Duchesses of York, gave great satisfaction to their Royal Highnesses. With excellent and substantial fare, they combined all the attraction that is to be derived from variety and contrast with the refinement of high life, and were rendered interesting by the revival of a custom of English hospitality, in those good old times, when the eminent Porter Brewers were used to entertain the Sovereign upon the benches in their Brew-houses: when Sir John Balycongre and generous spirit presided at the festive board of Princes, and afforded a richer beverage than the finest wines of France & Portugal. The worthy Alderman, encouraged by the success of his entertainments of last year, invited his royal Highness the Prince of Wales to partake of a similar feast this season, to which his Royal Highness readily assented. Yesterday was the day appointed for the purpose, and a numerous party of the prince's friends were invited to meet his Royal Highness. The entertainment took place in Alderman Combe's brew-house commonly called Gyfford's brew-house in Castle-street, Long Acre. About half past four o'clock the Alderman, accompanied by his son, Mr. Harvey Combe, and Mr. Shum, attended at the brew-house, to receive the company, Sir Gilbert Heathcote was the first. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales arrived a few minutes after. He was received by the Alderman, Mr. H. Combe, and Mr. Shum, who conducted his Royal Highness into the brew-house.—The workmen at the time in full activity, brewing porter and mashing malt: his Royal Highness minutely inspected the operation, with which he was extremely entertained and made several enquiries into the process and the manufacture. In a short time he was joined by the following personages:—the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord Chancellor, Earl of Lauderdale, Viscount Howick, Lord Robert Spencer, Lord John Townshend, Mr. Tierney, &c. and a few minutes before six o'clock the company sat down to dinner. The table was in the figure of a triangle, and was laid close to the place where the workmen were mashing the malt. Hopbacks constituted the table-cloth, and before each guest was laid a wooden trencher, with common knives and forks. Five fine rumps of beef were provided, and a butcher was employed to cut the steaks, from the primest and most delicate parts of them. The steaks were then taken by the stoker, the man whose employment it is to attend the fire in the Brewery, and who performed the functions of cook upon the occasion.—The iron fire-shovel being made bright and clean was placed upon the brew-house fire, and the stoker laid the steaks upon it.—He turned them with a small piece of iron, in the shape of a horse shoe, and when they were sufficiently broiled, they were taken off and put upon a wooden shovel about a foot and an half square, which is used in turning or removing the malt, and in that state carried to the table. His Royal Highness was the first helped, and was waited upon by his worthy host, who cut the centre piece out of one of the steaks, and placing it upon a trencher, the Alderman's Gentleman laid it before His Royal Highness. The clerks and other persons employed in the brew-house, dressed in white aprons, waited upon the rest of the company, whom they helped in the same manner, as no livery-servants were admitted. The table was also furnished with abundance of lettuces, sliced cucumbers, and a variety of pickles in wooden bowls. Porter, served in pewter-pots, was the only beverage. His Royal Highness was in high spirits, and declared he never was more pleased with a dinner. The dinner being over, at about seven o'clock the worthy Alderman retired unnoticed, and having mounted his horse, rode off at full speed to his house in Russell street, Bloomsbury, to be in readiness to receive the Prince and the rest of the company upon their arrival there, to close the entertainment of the day. Just as they were about to leave the Brew-house, Mr. Sheridan arrived in his carriage, and afforded them a hearty laugh at his disappointment.—Upon their arrival at Russell-street, they sat down to a most sumptuous second course.—The table exhibited many beautiful decorations, including two curious vases, ornamented with festoons of roses and other flowers, and a beautiful plateau in the middle, with a groupe of China figures.—The viands consisted of Guinea fowls, Turkey pouts, green peas, ducklings, peas, and French beans.—The desert consisted of the most delicious fruits; grapes, strawberries, &c. and Burgundy, Champagne, claret, hock and port, of the finest growth and flavour, sparkled upon the festive board.—His Royal Highness withdrew between nine and ten, and went to visit Lord Grenville. His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence was invited, but was absent from indisposition. Mr. Fox and General Fitzpatrick were prevented from attending, by official engagements.
