my tongue. But on repeating his words, and offering me the money, I dashed it from his hand, and in a phrenzy of fury rushed from the house. I gueffed full well the authors of my misery, the vile Wilfords, who, in my absence by the most fervile arts, ingratiated themselves with Mr. T----. He abandoned me for their fons. Hours I continued walking about his demeine almost unconfcious of my being ; the infult I had received, the difappointment of all my hopes was too much for a natural impetuous temper. When reafon a little calmed my paffion, I refolved immediatly to repair to my parents. I had not feen them fince my infancy, though my withes to behold them were great. Mr. T always prevented my gratifying them as they lived at an extreme diftance from him. Nothing will intimidate a youthful mind when bent on executing a favourite project; on foot, therefore, without confideration I began my journey; no pleasing thoughts foothed my breast or beguiled the tedious way. The third day I conjectured I must be pretty near their habitation ; filial piety fprung in my breast and quickened my steps at the idea ; a pleafing calm diffufed itfelf over my foul in anticipating the rapture of the partial embrace-a dufky hue was beginning to fteal along the expanse, and sober evening had taken 'her wonted station in the middle air.'

A Church-yard lay on one fide of the road, and the only feperation between them was a flight broom hedge. I thought I heard the plaintive voice of woe. I looked and difcerned a venerable man, whole figure must have moved even the fullen apathy of the ftoic. He was feated on a new made grave-his grey locks displayed his age, and he appeared bending beneath the pressure of misfortune-his eyes were now watering the grave, now caft up to heaven, with a fettled look of defpair. I could not pais him unnoticed-I entered this mournful receptacle of death -too much absorbed, he had not heeded me, till a figh burft from my oppressed heart. Without starting, he raised his head, and cried, who feeks this dreary spot !- One I replied, pierced by adverfity, who is haftening to a parent's bofom, where his wounds may receive the balm of confolation. Struck by your distrefs, I could not pass you, a secret impulse rose in my soul, I wished to hear your woes. Alas ! young man, he answered, my woes are of the fevereft kind. I indulged hope, I liftened to its idle prattle, I thought to have fpent the remnant of my days in peace-but the shafts of affliction were let loofe against me-they pierced this aged breast-it once had courage, refolution- I now can boaft of none-grief has fubdued it-yefterday's fun beheld the darling of my age configned to the earth-the worm will foon begin to feast upon the beautious cheek I have so often kist with all the idolizing warmth of a parent; but she is happy, an angel-his voice faultered-Nature demands those tears from me as her just tribute-the virtues of my child too-he could not proceed, a fob ftified his words-after an interval, he continued. I have a wife, fire is dying, bleft release from mifery, yct frail fortitude would not enable me to fee her depart. She raved for her child-I wept-fhe called for food-I fhuddered-I had none —I crawled from the houle to this grave—it has been watered with my tears. Unhappy man! ill-fated Harland——Har-land! repeated I with emotion—Great God! pardon me, had you a fon ?- Yes, the hopes of his happiness mitigates my defpair. A friend adopted him, and promifed to shelter his youthful head from the mifery I now feel. Since the five first years of his life I have not beheld him. Now, cried I, catching him in my arms, you behold him-blafted his ardent expectations, returned a beggar to you. For a moment he was filent, then raifing his hands to heaven, exclaimed, thy will be done, Almighty Father ! this is the final ftroke. How fallacious are the promifes of men. Well does the holy book of infinite wildom advife -Put not your truft in princes or the children of men.

Come, my child, my poor deceived fon, let us haften to your mother, perhaps she lives, you may receive her blessing. But why should I minutely dwell on this melancholy subject ? No, amiable Miss Blandford, I will not pain your generously susceptible heart. In a fortnight I paid the last mournful tribute to both my parents. Half insensible of existence, I continued till a happy deftiny conducted me to the fpot where fo providentially I affifted in faving you-again I was the inftrument of preferving a life fo infinitely precious. Oh, Mifs Blandford ! at your fight fensations unknown to me before rose in my breast ! Pardon my tion. My mind open to each foft impression-fuch a reiump form, fuch fweetnefs, no wonder. The keeneft diffreis reduced me to my prefent fituation. I had no friends to whom I could apply for affiftance. In my tranquil days I had taken pleafure in cultiva in, fmall fpots of ground, and rearing

FOR THE TELEGRAPHE. THE DROOPING ROSE.

A PASTORAL MONODY.

Sweet Rofe, look up; thy Seafon comes at last; Fierce Aquilo hath spent his chilling blast; And every Monument of Winter's power Melts in the Western breeze and vernal shower. Sweet Rofe, thy Seafon comes, and comes to bring The welcome period of no common Spring.

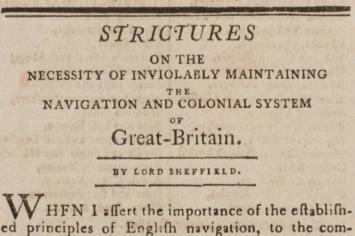

Thrice has yon River burft his icy chain, And spread his annual tribute o'er the plain, Diffufing, from his rich and fwelling tide, The Seeds of future plenty far and wide; While here, forfaken, it has been thy lot " To blush unseen," and, in this charming spot, " To wafte thy fweetness on the defert air. But now, sweet Rose, look up, this joyles doom No more awaits thy renovated bloom. His tafk again, see, faithful Nichols plies; Again this fpot attracts admiring eyes ; And they, whose absence we so long bewail, Befpeak fair Winds to fwell the lofty fail, And speed their pailage home. But-is it bome? Can it, alass, be so to them, who come From England hither ? Or, as hence they went, Can they return, with joy and gay content ? Yes! when a fense of duty intervenes, Virtue will gladly quit the fplendid Scenes Of pomp or pleasure ; still secure to find, In every place, that "Sunshine of the mind," That felf-approved ferenity of foul, Which tempers every clime, from pole to pole, And turns the World, in all its ample round, For England's Progeny, to English ground.

Then droop no more, fweet Rofe; they come! they come! Here to enjoy again the sweets of bome; Pure joys, which hallow the domeftic fpot; Pleafures which, tafted once, are ne'er forgot ! Sweet Role, they come, for whole return the fighs And prayers of anxious thoufands daily rife. O may propitious breezes waft them o'er With speed and fafety to this Western shore, Where loyal thousands with impatience burn To hail the jubilee of their Return!

A RIDDLE-BY MR. COWPER.

( Solotiand for the Telegraphes)

AM just two and two-I am warm, I am cold, And the parent of numbers that cannot be told. I am lawful, unlawful-a duty, a fault, I am often fold dear-good for nothing when bought. An extraordinary boon, and a matter of courfe, And yielded with pleafure where taken by force.

this kind, sufficiently obvious. The number of veffels employed in our commerce with that part of the world in the year 1791, as appears by the report of the Committee of Privy Council, amounted to upwards of 740, containing 154,643 tons. This is great in a commercial, but still greater in a political estimite. The profperity of the trade proves the wifdom of the fystem on which it has been conducted; and the number of feamen and veffels which it employs, renders it of effential confequence to the maritime power of the nation.

I feel more zealous on this fubject from a knowledge of the efforts that have been made to derange the effential principles of laws and systems under which we have flourished, and which have become the object of applaule, and as far as poffible, of imitation, in foreign nations. Some of the Weft-Indian planters more than once, and that with violence and clamour have laboured to acomplish their views of an unrestricted intercourse with America; and the activity of their zeal, and the eager felfichness of their views, still continue to be exerted to carry their point. We know that, on the occasion of the treaty of 1794, with the United States, they proceeded to far in conjunction with the Americans, as to obtain the important and milchievous conceffions that American veffels not exceeding 70 tons, should enjoy a free trade to the West India ports. Fortunately, the Americans were diffatisfied with the limitation ; but though they fulpended the ratification of the article, (and they should in future be kept to their word) the fact is still the same, and continues to speak a very forcible admonition. I am, therefore, apprehenfive, and more particularly when I recollect that they into whole hands these affairs generally fall, do not always direct their attention to luch lubjects. They are too apt to liften to those who have a measure to carry, or a prejudice to maintain; and however acquainted they may be with theory and theoretic writings, which often millead, they have not fufficient practical knowledge to comprehend the full meaning and probable confequences of what is propoled.

I cannot but dwell much and anxiously on a fubject which involves not merely the maintenance of our navy, but the whole ule, and advantage, and dependence of our colonies. Sir Jofiah Child, speaking of our West India Islands, maintains, that " if they were not kept to the rules of the Act of Navigation, the confequence would be, that, in a few years, the benefit of them would be wholly loft to the nation." Dr. Adam Smith frequently implies the fame perfusion, and afferts uneqivocally. " that the fame act is the wifeft of all the commercial regulations of England." Mr. Gentz, as we have feen, adopts and heightens this language of approbation and praise. I repose not however even on the high authority of these names but on the facts and evidences by which that authority has been fanctioned ; and I do not hefitate to affert my own persuasion, not only that, if the admittance of American shipping into the West India ports is to be allowed, those islands would become dependent on the American States; and that rather than furrender the carrying trade to the islands, it would be incomparably better to renounce the iflands themfelves. It can scarcely be repeated too often that Britain derives no benefit from her West India Colonies, except those accruing to her navigation, manufactures, and agriculture, by fupplying their wants, and by the monopoly of their carrying trade; and it is those advantages alone, procured and preserved by the navigation system, which can countervail, in any respect, the enormous expense of protecting them. The fame articles which they furnish, might be purchased at least twenty per cent. cheaper at other markets, and the fame revenue would arife from them, if they came through the Dutch, the Danes, or the French. I fee not, therefore, why we fhould make the facrifices expected from us, either with respect to America, or the illands; with respect to America, because there can be little doubt of her continuing to take from us more than the can pay for; and with respect to the Islands, because the monopoly which they enjoy of the British market, iccures to them a better price than they could elfeof a of th cord ful t exag poft deter Taffe ever, Ruff Vacu the I Iqua hope fland ed or

wł

TH

CON

ve

VOI

COL

cel

ma

cor

ful

the

diti

and

tha

yct

pri

a pro of the tween

by th

prifal

Franc

to the

ty, ar

as pro

binet,

Gover

juncti

ture fo

undou

peace;

maner

any fe

Mail

the fai

last th ing be

deferv

and fa

courie

duct o

ing th ihip.

All the lowly children of the vale.

In this fituation I mix not with the other domeflics-that indeed I could not bear. Fortune in degrading my rank has left my fpirit unfubdued. Pardon me, Madam, for having engroffed fo much of your time. I could not refift the wifh of acquainting you with the occurrences that have reduced me to this fation. Farewell, most amiable of women, may finiling peace ever hover round you, prays E. H. ever hover round you, prays (To be Continued.)

Oliver Bradley

R ESPECTFULLY informs his friends and the public in general, that he has removed from that old Stand in Back-freet, to his new Shop, nearly opposite the Main Guard, where he fill carries on the BLACKSMITH and EDGE-TOOL businefs, in all its various branches.

He tenders his thanks to the public, for t' e favours he has received in the line of his buinefs, and wifhes a continuance of their cuflom.

N. B. Any orders in the above line will be thankfully received and faithfully attended to.

Wanted, QUANTITY of RAGS, for which, Books In or each will be given in exchange. PRINTING-OFFICE.

mercial and maritime prosperity of this country, I reft my opinion on no abstract and theoretic grounds, but, on the ftrong and flubborn evidence of experience and of fact. For some time after the American war, the increase of our shipping was rapid and remarkable; and Lord Liverpool, and other very intelligent men, have not hefitated to afcribe that increale to the policy, and to the policy alone, with which England then maintained her navigation and colonial system. Whereas, in the course of ten years, during which we were renouncing our old and wife regulations, the extraordinary diminution in our tonnage, which has been mentioned, took place; while the number of veffels employed by Great Britain in the American trade, diminished as rapidly as it had before increaled; and the tonnage of America, according to her own account, advanced with yet greater rapidity, viz. to 939,000, that is, to within about 15,000 of what is known to have been the whole commercial tonnage of England, in the year 1787. It would therefore appear, not only, that our commerce and marine are intimately connected with our navigation fystem, but that, as that fystem is infringed or maintained, the commerce and marine are to flourish or decline.

Even the flighteft view of our Weft-Indian trade, will render the danger of infringements of believe facrifi has, from would lector, Hope fent to 7 perfor coaft frigate comm adorne crew.

66 veffel fifting veffels, We ma sure of action cafy fa paft 6 fides w veffels close a the this forry th the nig