An interesting programme was carried out and the ladies of the council served refreshments.

Each member of a Fraternal Order should make it a rule to secure at least one new member for his lodge every six months. This can easily be done if a little effort is put forth. It does not require long arguments to convince one of the benefits of a Fraternal Order.—Plank and Platform.

The brother, far from home and family, friends and lodge, and who, to drive away the loneliness and strangeness surrounding him finds his way to the lodge, should have the warmest greetings from those to whom he is bound by fraternalities. A cold and careless reception chills the marrow of his enthusiasm and often loses to the Order one who might be an ornament and a bright and shining light.—Colorado Oddfellow.
