
LINES

(To be said at "your mistress' eyebrows")
The sky bears spicy anodyne
To touch this row of blackened hills,
And flush this dusty little vine
With day-time color that the night-time kills.

The dawn holds candles to your eyes
And lights the wells of wonder there;
The winds make love-sick little sighs
At the uncertain shadows of your hair.

Upon the sea the dawn is strong,
Strong, like a god in red and gold;
It lifts itself like some brave song
Made by a battle-loving bard of gold.

But here with you my whimsical
'Tis delicately beautiful.
