

of Sadie, Gertrude, Helen C., and Kay H., the fact that they really could be of some use in the kitchen.

At last we managed to get all the boys collected and placed at the proper places in the Gym. Mr. Rouse pronounced Grace and then the work of destruction on the edibles we had prepared was begun. Whether or not the boys accepted everything offered them simply to avoid wounding our pride in our culinary accomplishments, I am not prepared to say; be that as it may, they certainly did appreciate our work to such an extent that we really began to fear that the poor cooks would have to go supperless. (Dame rumor reports that Dick Chestnut actually required the services of two waitresses, both of which he kept fully occupied).

Mr. Rouse proposed the first toast to the King, following which Mr. Cass proposed one to the Rothesay boys. The banquet closed with speeches distinguished for their brevity by Scott, Captain of the Rothesay team; and Hickey.

Unfortunately the Rothesay boys could not stay for the dance at the G. W. V. A. rooms after the banquet, and were obliged to make a hasty dash for the train.

Of course we don't like to gossip, but we can't help wondering to whom those Blue and White ribbons belonged that Sadie and Gertrude were sporting. Helen, too, arrived at the dance bedecked with colors and with that far-away look in her eyes. Can't someone relieve our curiosity?

—M. B., '24.

A. & B. Corn Roast

A and B Classes held their annual corn-roasts on the shore of the Tourish Camping Ground, on Friday night, Sept. 14th. It certainly was a conglomeration—boys and girls, A's and B's corn, butter and marshmallows were scattered thickly all over the beach and around the bon-fire. After all had been satisfied, and their appetites heartily dissatisfied with the delicious roasted corn and marshmallows, they scrambled up the steep banks and played the usual games, and sang the old cheery songs. Cars added an unusual amount of interest. With "Auld Lang Syne" and "God Save the King," this first school function of the year closed. All thanks are due to Major and Mrs. Rouse for so kindly chaperoning the noisy crowd.

C. Class Corn Roast

On Thursday, September 13th, 1923, a meeting of C Class was conducted in Mr. Miller's room. During the meeting it was decided to hold a corn roast, but on account of the inclemency of the weather it was postponed.

On Friday, a similar meeting was held and the corn roast decided upon if the weather continued fine.