Talks of What She Saw and Admired in Flood's.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC LADY

"I went into Flood's, yesterday," said a lady to PROGRESS. "Do you wonder that Lam here? Well, I am surprised myself, but then, after looking and admiring for hours and buying all I was able to, and, I am afraid, much more, I thought of others equally eager to see the beautiful things and regretfully departed.

"I do think," she continued,""that St John people are fortunate. They have with them an establishment which cannot fail to supply every gift wish of the festal season. And what a hold Flood's has on the city at this season. Every [one] asks me, 'Have you been to Flood's ?' and I

AFTER FORTY YEARS.

Some of the Sinclair Family Learn Some Facts About Themselves.

There was great excitement among the good folk of the Green of Invermay, Perthshire, Scotland, one day in the year 1818. Peter Sinclair, a stout young blacksmith, 18 years old, had decided to leave the "auld hame" for Canada.

It was a long and weary journey in those days. The voyage in a sailing vessel might take from one to three months. Little was known of Canada by the good people of Invermay, save that it was a cold country, where the Indians abounded, and where some of the adventurous Scots had already established settlements.

So Peter Sinclair bade his friends goodbye, and in due time reached St. John, New Brunswick. He appears to have liked the country, for, two years later, in 1820, his brother John, also a blacksmith, followed him to the new land. They appear to have corresponded with their relatives for some years, but after a time the letters ceased. The old folks were passing away, the young ones formed new ties. The Sinclairs of the old land and the Sinclairs of the new land bade fair to drift apart forever.

All correspondence ceased 40 years ago. John died in 1845, and 30 years later Peter was gathered to his fathers at a ripe old age.

Both of the brothers were married and their families grew up ignorant of the existence of their relatives in Scotland. Their relatives were equally ignorant of them.

Very recently, however, circumstances arose in Scotland which made it necessary to learn if any trace could be found of Peter and John, or their issue, if any. A letter to this effect reached Detective Joseph Sharp last Wednesday week.

Detective Sharp is not a man to lose time in any case, and he started on the case at once. By Wednesday night he had learned more about the Sinclair family than the members of it had known for the last forty years.

Sinclair is not an uncommon name, but only three of the number whose names are

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Woods entertained the Round Table club, Wednesday evening, at one of the pleasantest meetings yet held. An elaborate supper was served at Mr. William Murray has account 12, followed by dancing. Miss MacNichol's rush whist party,

Thursday evening, was a most delightful one, it being one of those social affairs in which many of our St. Stephen friends participated. The design for choosing partners was very unique and original. Candy canes tied with various colored ribbons were passed to each of the guests and the gentleman selected the lady carrying the cane of the color corresponding to his. Mrs. Hazen Grimmer, of St. Stephen, was the fortunate lady this time and bore away a handsome silver bon-bon dish, and her partner, Mr. Harry Graham, a very pretty inkstand. After a sumptuous repast, some fine music added the crowning feature of the evening. The Browning club will meet with Miss Helen Foster, Friday evening, many new members having been added recently, among whom are Mr. Charles King, formerly of Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, and Mr. Burton McAllister of the famous Munroe School of oratory.

Beautiful Books.

Among the many beautiful gift books that adorn Mr. Alfred Morrisev's counter are two worthy of special mention. When Europel llustrated was shown PROGRESS and the representative was asked what it was worth, "I should say five dollars," was the reply. "One dollar and a half," was the astonishing rejoiner. With that information PROGRESS can say that there is no such bock in the market for the money. Though standing there but a few minutes, in that time Mr. Morrisey sold three of them. The public is evidently of the same opinion. The illustrations of Europe Illustrated are good, giving a splendid idea of many of night the first Margaret died, and the name of the dead child was given to her.

William Sinclair was very much surprised to hear that he had relatives in Scotland. He had supposed they were all dead years ago. They had written to his father and uncle long, long ago, begging them not to stay and "die among the savages," but as the young men did not return time and distance began to separate the branches of the family forever.

Only one of the children of John Sinclair is living. This is Isabelle, who married Mr. Robertson, a tailor, and now lives in Boston. Her sisters, Jane and Margaret, are dead.

John Sinclair, who lives at New Lodge, Stamanon, Scotland, will be very glad to hear that he has three cousins living, and that "the savages" are not likely to trouble them.

And Detectiv Sharpe by his prompt and satisfactory solution of the problem has shown that the grass did not grow under his feet this time any more than in the recovery of the missing Knight lad.
