

EVERYBODY IS HAPPY.

THE CELEBRATED DOCTOR OR NO DOCTOR CASE IN MONCTON.

The Public Enjoy the Sensation—Plenty of Advertising for the Doctor—A Vacation for Witnesses and Money for the Lawyers—The Latest Phase.

The physicians of Moncton, that is to say a few of them, seem quite as eager to give Dr. Carlton a large amount of free advertising as the clergymen were to perform a like service for Mr. C. F. Hanington a few months ago, and with the same thoroughly satisfactory results, as far as the Dr. himself is concerned. Indeed he has every reason to rise up and call them blessed, for they have certainly succeeded in largely increasing the amount of grist which comes to his mill. Once more the inscrutable wizard of the far north has been before the "Court of Star Chamber," and this time he has emerged from the tribunal with flying colors, and a triumphant flourish of trumpets. The engagement began last Tuesday morning, Dr. Smith being the complainant, and after a brief skirmish the opposing forces were drawn off to await reinforcements, and the battle royal was fought on Wednesday morning with terrible slaughter for the aggressive party, and an easy victory for the defendants.

Mr. Hanington was in fine form, the heat and the previous day's adjournment and consequent delay having had the same effect on his leonine nature that a swarm of gnats would have upon the king of beasts, namely, making him roar; and he roared to some purpose. In the graphic and forcible language of the "First Royal Reader for use in schools," "he roared loud," as the counsel and witnesses for the prosecution learned to their sorrow. And as he succeeded in proving beyond all possibility of doubt that Dr. Carlton was practicing in Woodstock at the time of the passing of the New Brunswick Medical act as a clairvoyant physician, and therefore exempt from its provisions, the counsel for the prosecution announced that like the "roses that bloom in the spring," tra-la-la, he would "have nothing (more) to do with the case."

When Mr. Hanington asked that the said case be dismissed with costs, his request was granted with that courteous promptitude for which the stipendiary is celebrated, especially when he does not see his way clear, to pursuing any other course. But alas! no sooner had this helpless dove in the eagle's nest left the scene of his incarceration, and also of his triumph, and spread his downy pinions to taste the joys of freedom than a hawk clad in the frowning majesty of the law, as well as the uniform of the town marshal, pounced upon him with a sheaf of those awful arrows, known in legal parlance as "papers," which he promptly "served" upon him. And once more the unlucky doctor was under arrest—by the way, though, he must have grown so used to that condition of things by this time that he would not feel uneasy under any such circumstance. This time the complainant in the case was Dr. Bridges.

The complaint was dated July 19th, and the fact has leaked out that the marshal had been given instructions not to serve the papers until Thursday morning, so as to give the doctor's witnesses from abroad, whom he had brought to Moncton at great expense, an opportunity of returning to their homes. The marshal was fortunately too honest a man to lend himself to anything so small, and served them on Wednesday afternoon before the departure of the St. John train, and the witnesses remained in town.

Meanwhile all goes merry as a marriage bell. The case promises to rival the famous cause "Jarndice and Jarndice," for linked sweetness long drawn out, and nobody has the slightest objection. The public don't mind it at all, for it affords them the periodical distraction of going down to the court house "to hear how the Carlton case is getting on." The doctor has a tolerably long purse and an enormous clientele, so he does not mind; the witnesses are having a pleasant little holiday, and all expenses paid, so they are well satisfied; and, singularly enough, the legal fraternity don't seem to object to the course of events either. So everybody is quite happy.

GEORGEY CUTHBERT STRANGE.

His Ears Were Open.

A little Amherst boy, not quite four years of age, has recently been promoted to the dignity of going to church. He listened to the service with deep interest and flattering attention, though strange to say, he made few remarks on the way home. Nevertheless the good seed was far from being cast on barren ground, as events proved. A few days later Gerald's mother had occasion to rebuke him for some infantile fault, and, adopting the golden rule of putting herself in his place, she said, "Gerald! do you know that if I were a little boy, I don't think I'd want to do such naughty things; I'd rather be good! "Mudder," said the philosopher impressively, standing with his feet very far apart and a fat thumb elevated to command attention, "Did't I hear you say we done those things we ought not a done in church last Sunday? Now what did you do it for?"

THE PEA AND SHELL SWINDLE.

How the Game is Worked and the Countryman Victimized.

Since the examination of Foster, the fakir, on the charge of obtaining money under false pretences, a great many persons have been asking the question, "What is the pea and shell swindle, and how is it worked?" And for the benefit of those who have not been so unfortunate as to find out by experience, I will try and explain. There are several pea and shell fakirs in the city at the present time—if they have not gone to Halifax. The method of one of the prominent of these fakirs—after he has erected a stand—is to begin by throwing a handful of coppers in the air. While this is a unique way of attracting attention, it also serves to scatter the small boys who gather round him while the stand is being put up. When business has been dull a handful of peanuts will have the same result. (This throwing away of money may not seem so strange when it is known that the same "gentleman" extracts corns without payin'.) Three half walnut shells are placed on the stand, and a pea is rolled about which, in full view, is finally placed under one of the shells by the fakir, who then offers $4 to $2, $10 to $5, etc., to any person who wishes to bet under which shell the pea is. Nobody bets. "Try it for fun, then," and some one tries it for fun, and finds the pea the first time. The same performance is gone over, and the fakir offers to bet a quarter. A quarter isn't much to lose, and some one bets—and wins. Then the fun generally begins.

If there are any "countrymen" in the crowd, they wedge in closer in their eagerness to become suddenly rich. The pea is placed under one of the shells again, the fakir moves the other two a little, and the first offer is repeated. The fellow who has been watching it close puts up a V; he grabs at the shell and—as Josh Billings says of the flea—when he has it, "it ain't there." After several persons have bet the same way and lost, the crowd begin to suspect that it is a "fake," and it is here the fakir's colleagues get in their work. They bet and win, and encourage the "countryman," and the latter often puts up his last dollar, betting, as he thinks, on a sure thing. So it is—for the fakir.

The "coppers" have other duties to perform. They crowd in front of the small boys, and incidentally make room in front for the adults; they sometimes raise a row with the fakir, so that their identity will not be suspected; they lose once or twice, and also keep an eye open for policemen. They purposely bet on a different shell than the one under which the pea is supposed to be, and then the fakir offers an even chance to the next better, which chance is more readily accepted than the first. One of the fakirs was operating on a barrel recently, and as the crowd had lost considerable money, they were planning how to make it hot for him, and at the same time he was planning how to escape. One of his pals, who was given the tip, came up and demanded the barrel, and took it. The fakir explained that he had only borrowed it, and requested the crowd to "hold on a minute" until he got another, which he went in search of, but apparently never found. Sometimes, however, the fakir gets "faked." When he says, "Try it for fun," the pea is generally there, and some smart chap who knows the trick will grab at the shell and try it for $2. It is no use to raise a fuss, the sympathies of the crowd are with the better, and the fakir pays over $4. Perhaps the same smart chap will knock over the shell while handing his money to bet, and if the pea is not there, quickly withdraws his hand. There are many other interesting features of the game, but as I have taken up considerable space already, I will merely add that the swindle is simply a slight-of-hand trick, by which the pea is seemingly placed under a shell, but in reality is conveyed into the hand, between the thumb and forefinger.

PORTLAND.

A "BURGLAR" ON ELLIOTT ROW.

How the Police Force Prepared For a Fierce Encounter.

There was a commotion on Elliott row, a few evenings ago, and for a time it was doubtful if some great crime had not been committed. The usually quiet and orderly inhabitants did not know what to make of the congregation of so much police force in their select neighborhood, and the rumor that a burglar was abroad soon spread throughout the locality.

The wife of a police officer raised the row. She and her husband live in the lower flat of a house that had no other tenants. When she was retiring about 10.30, she heard the tramp, tramp, tramp of feet on the upper floor. Her husband was on night duty and, about scared to death, she rushed forth and proclaimed that there was a man—a burglar—in the house. A friend's telephone explained the matter at the central police station, the sergeant in charge notified the husband of his wife's peril and detailed a squad to proceed to Elliott row and catch the daring scoundrel who would invade the home of an officer of the law.

The house was soon surrounded, policemen standing at the four corners of the compass with drawn revolvers and batons. Two officers went fearfully and slowly to the door of the room where the tramp of feet was heard; the force outside was cautioned to be in readiness, and with a rush and a push the door flew open, and—a spaniel dog ran out. He had been left behind by his master, the owner of the house, who inspected the premises in the afternoon, and was quite glad to be released.

When You Need

An Alterative Medicine, don't forget that everything depends on the kind used. Ask for Ayer's Sarsaparilla and take no other. For over forty years this preparation has had the endorsement of leading physicians and druggists, and it has achieved a success unparalleled in the history of proprietary medicines.

"For a rash, from which I had suffered some months, my father, an M. D., recommended Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It effected a cure. I am still taking this medicine, as I find it to be a most powerful blood-purifier."—J. E. Cooke, Denton, Texas.

"C. H. Hut, Druggist, Evansville, Ind., writes: 'I have been selling Ayer's Sarsaparilla for many years. It maintains its popularity, while many other preparations, formerly as well known, have long been forgotten.'"

"I have always recommended Ayer's Sarsaparilla as superior to any other preparation for purifying the blood."—G. B. Kuykendall, M. D., Pomeroy, W. T.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

PREPARED BY Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Twelve o'clock, noon: Office Boy—Please, sir, I'd like to get away this afternoon to attend my aunt's funeral. Employer—Very well, James, you may go.

One o'clock, p. m.: Employer—Well, I'm not feeling at all well to-day; I believe I'll go home and lie down for awhile. Later—Employer and office boy meet at the ball grounds: Employer—How is this, James? I thought you were to attend the funeral of your aunt? Office Boy—Dey postponed de funeral till next week when dere ain't no game.

For cholera, cholera infantum, summer complaint, cramps and pains in the bowels, there is no remedy that can be more relied upon than Kendrick's Mixture, for children or adults.—Advt.

Vanderhoof—Miss Primmer isn't pretty, and she is over 40, but I understand that old Primmer is going to give her a substantial dot.

Vanderhorn—He ought to; she is in her dotage.

Much injury is done by the use of irritating, griping compounds taken as purgatives. In Ayer's pills, the patient has a mild but effective cathartic, that can be confidently recommended alike for the most delicate patients as well as the most robust.—Advt.

No medicine in the world is in better repute or more widely known than Ayer's Sarsaparilla. As a safe and certain remedy for all manner of blood disorders, leading physicians and druggists everywhere recommend it in preference to any other.—Advt.
