A very pleasant party was given on Monday evening, by Miss Alice Stevens. A number of ladies and gentlemen from Calais were present, and as the evening was cool, dancing was indulged in until quite late. The ladies were all prettily and stylishly dressed, the young hostess wearing a white dress. For the benefit of PROGRESS' young lady readers, I will try and describe a few of the prettiest dresses:

Mrs. A. E. Neil was "At Home" to her friends from 4 to 6 o'clock this afternoon. It is always a pleasure to visit Mrs. Neill, her beautiful home filled with bric-a-brac and art, and the graceful, lively hostess herself puts one at ease in a moment. A severe thunder shower prevented many guests from attending. The costumes of those who were there were very handsome, but lack of time prevented me from describing them. Refreshments were served during the afternoon and the time for going home came only too soon.

St. Stephen and Calais will be delightfully gay next week. Mrs. C. W. Young has given invitations to a large party at her home, Dover Hill, on Tuesday evening the 13th, and in Calais on the 15th Mrs. Henry B. Eaton and Mrs. Henry Pike have invited their many friends to a grand ball in the St. Croix hall. These parties have caused quite a flutter of excitement among the ladies, and I might add the gentlemen also, and a very enjoyable week is an-

Mrs. Wilbur deserve the most unstinted praise for their kindness and hospitality. I am pleased to note that some of our young ladies are adding horseback riding to their list of accomplishments. I heard some very flattering remarks, Thursday evening, on their graceful riding and the ease with which they manage their horses after such little practice. The most sincere sympathy is felt for the bereaved family of Mrs. Murchey, of Toronto, who lost her life while bathing off Carron Point, on Monday last. Mr. Thomas Carney, collector of taxes, is very ill. I understand that the mother of Mr. R. Carr Harris,

LITTLE ATTENTIONS. Man is essentially an animal composed of streaks, the vices are fat and the virtues are lean. The Irishman fed his pig one day and starved it the next, to make the pork streaked evenly. We have improved upon his method by feeding our vices every day and our virtues once a week. One of our very leanest virtues, which pays as poorly as a three-inch seam of coal in a mountain of slate, is that surface amiability which takes the shape of an anxiety to humor people's whims, feed old or the infirm, but don't do it with the their vanity, and gratify that spirit of exaction which, once begun, never knows where to stop, by paying them all sorts of "little attentions." It may be said that social life is made up of such trifles.

"Yet trifles make the sum of human things, And half our misery from trifles spring."

And if our misery, also our happiness, for what is a happy life but the continual rendering of every description of small, sweet courtesies and attentions, just as animal life itself is but so many puffs of breath, ocean but so many drops of water, and the national debt but an ımmense collection of cents, all going to make up a perfect whole. And so to set up as a sort | afore. - The Epoch.

small attentions all around, is a good deal like trying to pay off the debt a few cents

If you do a friend some great service, like springing into the water after him when he tumbles over a wharf, or putting your name on the back of a note for a $1000 to help him out of a tight place, he will probably feel grateful to you. We are Mrs. Will C. Purvis, of Fairville, is visiting all apt to measure our gratitude by the size of the favor received.

But do that same friend a succession of small favors from one year's end to another, and he will never take the slightest notice of them-until they cease-then he is indignant. There are people who seem to think that the world was specially created to provide pleasures for them, and whosoever would possess the privilege of their friendship and good will must be content to pay tribute every day and every hour. There is no compounding by paying down Miss Annie Smith and Miss Amy Carman, the a lump sum; they are too independent to incur a large obligation; they prefer the instalment plan-a little at a time, and that

> The most arbitrary and merciless of all duns are those whose accounts are small. They will hunt you from the sanctuary of your own attic to the hospitable shelter of your friends cellar. If you owe a man $500, ten chances to one he will write you a respectful note twice a year asking you to pay it "if quite convenient," but should you owe the same man five dollars, depend upon it he will be terribly active in collectit, haunting you until, in desperation, you are driven to borrowing the amount of the bill and spending it in having a nice little time just to comfort yourself for all the > annoyance you have endured. So with the debts of affection and courtesy which we all owe to one another. Those who have the heaviest claims upon us are slowest to assert them. If we owe a very large, good turn to one, he does not go on persecuting us till we have paid it. The man whose friendship would be poorly requited by the sacrifice of our right hand, does not ask us to cut it off. But those who have merely driven our hens out of their own gardens expect us to requite the service by sending them the fattest pair when the time for slaughter arrives. Therefore, they who waste their lives trying to earn a cheap popularity by dancing attendance upon people who care nothing for them, and very likely despise them, for their over readiness to oblige, which looks almost like servility; who neglect their own legitimate affairs to attend to those of other people and get no thanks in return-anyone who does this, has started out on an interminable hunt, with an awfully dull scent to guide them. By all means pay every attention to the hope of reward; and, if you are a youn man, pay all the attention you please to the young and beautiful of the opposite sex, and with as much hope of reward as you like, for it does every one good to hope even if the hopes are never realized.
