"MONK."

The first time I ever saw the person whose name heads this sketch was when he walked into the office where I held the position of bookkeeper, and asked the general manager for a job.

In appearance he was almost hideous, his face being wider than it was broad, surmounted by a patch of woolly hair that came to the very edge of his eyebrows; so close, in fact, that the point of beginning could not be determined of either.

A cavernous mouth, containing rows of fangs that were continually in sight, opened beneath a nose of startling flatness.

A short, chunky body, with long arms and hands, that were seldom still, completes the best description I can give of "Monk."

The only thing that secured him a place was the shortness of hands, for the general manager turned to me when the negro walked out and said: "Did you ever see such an evil face on a human body?"

My reply was in the negative. Monk, however, much to my surprise, proved to be one of the best men we had, and everything went on as usual, until about two months after his appearance.

Then we began to be bothered with petty thieving from the commissary, which tion. affled the sharp-eyed clerk who held full sway in that department.

I should have mentioned before that the scene of this action was at a large sawmill, where, as is the case with all large manufacturers, we sold goods to our employees. The robberies, at first small and of little consequences, soon began to grow oftener and on a larger scale. Articles were marked and all such plans worked, but to no purpose, for the thief would leave the marked goods and take something else. Finally it got so boldly committed that the general manager secured the help of a detective and put him at work on the case. After a couple of weeks the detective came in the office and went into the private room of the general manager.

After a conference of a few moments, they came out smiling.

"We've got him," chuckled my employer, "and who do you think it is?"
"Monk," I replied, my first thought being of the meanest-looking negro of the "Correct," said the general manager, "and what do you suppose he did with the stuff he took?" "That's more than I can tell." "Well, the detective is to show us tonight, and he says we will not hurt Monk for it, if we are the people he takes us to That night the general manager, detective and myself were secreted near the commissary, waiting for Monk to show himself. About 10 o'clock we saw his ugly form come sliding through one of the windows, in company with two sacks of flour and numerous other bundles. He stood still for a short time after geting to the ground, and looked carefully around; then, as if satisfied that he was unseen, he shouldered his load and marched silently off, with us in the rear. He went about two miles through the woods, and finally came to a halt before a small cabin. Softly he crept to the door and listened, as if to be sure no one was up.

Then he took one of the sacks of flour and laid it noiselessly on the front steps, and piled some of the other packages on it.
This done, he went on with the rest of his

His actions were a perfect mystery to me and the detective said:

"I want you to say here until day, to watch the person who takes that stuff away, while this gentleman and I will follow him to the other places."

I agreed, and began a lonely watch. The hours before day seemed ages, but when the first rays oft the sun gilded the waving trees, I was alert and at my post. Just a few moments after the sun arose, the door was opened by a little white girl, who gave a cry of delight, as her eyes fell on the provisions, and called to some one in the house:

"Old Santy has been here again." In answer to her cry a boy joined her and the two lifted the flour and packages and an old torn mattress, lay the form of a woman, covered with a tattered shawl and apparently asleep. The room contained no furniture, with the exception of a rickety table and two home manufactured chairs. There was no other occupant of the place, save this woman and the two children, the eldest of whom was not over 8 When I reached my post of observation the boy and girl were standing beside the still form of the woman, trying to arouse

"Mammy," the girl said, "get up and see what we've got this morning; old Santy has brought us some real flour, and coffee and sugar, and, oh, so many nice things."
But the figure did not move.

"Don't bother her," spoke the boy, she's tired out; don't you know how she cried and set up last night?"
"Yes," smiled the sister; "I will get breakfast and then wake her; won't she be happy, though?" And those two began preparing a meal that to them was an undoubted feast.

I still remained at the hole to see what the end would be, for I felt that something would happen that would require the help of an older person.

It was not long before the girl had a pot of hot coffee ready, together with a few pieces of crisp bacon and a hoe cake. She approached the pallet again and called her mother, but still no answer.

"Brother," she said, in a low whisper, "I b'lieve she is worse. "I could see the boy's face pale at this, and he went to the mattress and knelt beside it. As he drew back the cover from the face, he gave a cry of sorrow. "What is it?" asked the sister, sinking at his side.

The boy looked at her in a despairing manner and sobbed: "Oh, sister, mammy is dead and gone

The girl was speechless with terror, but soon recovered her voice, and replied in a tone choked with sadness:

"No, she ain't, Buddy; she's jest cold like; she got that way heap times."

The boy shook his head and continued

"Yes sir," he replied, his big eyes stream-

"What do you think of prosecuting Monk

"It is the farthest thing from my mind," answered, as the picture of the scene l had witnessed passed before me.

"And mine also," replied my employer while I saw signs of tears in his usually stern eyes.

Not long after that Monk was sent for and came to the office. As he shambled in, his hideousness was lost to me, for in the face I could only see the good heart that I had seen the actions of a short while before.

He was badly frightened, for he knew that his deeds had been found out. In answer to questions put to him we learned that he had been feeding three destitute families for two months or more. He never let the occupants of the cabins know who was the giver of their daily bread, but sought them at the hour of mid-night and left the food on the steps, as we had seen him do. The only excuse he offered was: "Boss, I foun' dem po' fokes widout a mou'ful, an' tuck hit to um; yo' had er lot ob it, an' I thought yo'd nebber miss hit." "Didn't you know it was wrong to steal?"

"Yes, sar, but I kaint hear no 'oman an' chillun cryin' fer bread, when my airms air long 'nough ter git through er window pane an' onfasten de sosh."

We did not prosecute Monk, but in the future the general manager kept up the poor that Monk discovered, and let him have the satisfaction of taking it to them.

The orphan boy and girl were taken by a worthy farmer, not far from the mill, and every now and then I catch sight of their happy faces, and think what a change was made in their lives, and that by a negro whom no one would trust ten steps prior to

B. M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo., says: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."

Mrs. S. A. Rock, of Anderson, Texas, writes: "At the age of 34, in Monroe, La., I had a severe attack of swamp, or hair commenced coming out, and so continued until it had well nigh all gone. I used several kinds of hair restorers, but they did no good. A friend gave me a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor. Before finishing the first bottle my hair began to grow, and by the time I used three bottles, I had a fine head of hair."

Tobacco Chewers Among Women.

A well known physician, while walking down the street with a friend, remarked, a patient of mine lives in that house who is dving-an idolized wife-beyond all help, and tobacco chewing has killed her. Why, Doctor! What do you mean? I mean this: her husband is literally steeped in tobacco juice, and the insensible perspiration from his body has become so saturated with nicotine as to be a deadly poison. His wite, before I was called, had absorbed "Mister, I'm so glad you come; Mammy enough of the poison so that no human power can save her; and even he will, I believe end his days in torture from some I did not reply, but stepped to the pallet form of skin disease. The skin is really the most wonderful and important organ of the human body. Night and day, every hour of our lives, it is filtering out from the blood useless or poisonous debris. If it stopped work even for 24 hours in this or any case, death would ensue. You can imagine, then, what it means for a delicate, sensitive-skinned woman to sleep in a warm bed night after night with an inveterate tobacco chewer. The skin and mucous membrane of some persons is much more sensitive than others. A person who in summer is subject to hay fever, tanned or to, but 'cause we didn't have money 'nough | burned skin, in winter to colds, bronchitis, chapped hands or chilblains, ought always "What will you do now?" How a Convict is Searched.

"You have no idea, Mr. Kennan," said Captain Nikolin, "how unscrupulous they are, and how much criminal skill they show in concealing forbidden things and in smuggling letters into and out of prison. Suppose that you were going to search a politi-cal convict as thoroughly as possible, how would you do it?"

I replied that I should strip him naked and make a careful examination of his clothing.

"Is that all you would do?" he inquired, with a surprised air.

I said that no other course of procedure suggested itself to me just at that moment. "Would you look in his ears?" "No," I answered; "I should not think of looking in his ears. "Would you search his mouth?" Again I replied in the negative.

"Would you look in a hollow tooth?" I solemnly declared that such a thing as looking in a hollow tooth for a letter would never, under any circumstances, have occurred to me.

"Well," he said triumphantly, "I have taken tissue paper with writing on it out of a prisoner's ear, out of a prisoner's mouth, and once I found a dose of deadly poison concealed under a capping of wax in a convict's hollow tooth. Ah-h-h!" he exclaimed, rubbing his hands, "they are very sly, but Iknow all their tricks."—George Kennan in the Century.

Until the blood is cleansed of impurities, it is useless to attempt the cure of any disease. Rheumatism, which is traceable to an acid in the blood, has been cured, in numerous cases, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, external treatment being of no avail .- Advt.
