Tuesday last, quite a number gathered in St. Stephen's church to witness the marriage of Miss Belle McLaren, second daughter of Dr. McLaren. of this city, to Mr. Turner Wilson, of Toronto. The bride entered the church at 8 o'clock, p. m., leaning on silk vest, hat to match trimmed with grey ostrich | England. feathers and pink ospreys. She carried a bouquet of pink Bouvardia tied with pink ribbons. The bride's gown was a travelling costume of pale green white roses and stephanotis tied with wide, white ribbons, the whole costume being most artistic and becoming. The groom was attended by Mr. Lyon, of Toronto. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party drove to the station where a large party of relatives and friends gathered to wish them goodbye, as well as the usual showers of rice, slippers, pedoes on the track, and as the train moved out of exhibition. the station several loud reports took every one present by surprise. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson intend visiting New York, Boston and Niagara before settling in their home in Toronto. The bride received many handsome gifts, among them a handsome diamond ring, the gift of the groom, who also presented the bridesmaid with a pin of gold and pearls.

On Wednesday morning, at the early hour of halfpast 7 o'clock, in the presence of a large assembly, a marriage was celebrated in the Roman Catholic cathedral, between Miss Florence Travers, daughter of Dr. Boyle Travers, and Dr.J.P. McInerney. The bride was attended to the altar by three bridesmaids, namely, Miss M. Travers, Miss P. Travers and Miss Marion Jack, who wore dresses of white silk, with different trimmings, one being pink and the others green and mauve, and large hats to match. The bridal gown was perhaps one of the handsomest ever seen in St. John. It was of cream brocaded velvet, with lace trimmings, and the usual veil and orange blossoms. The ushers were Mr. Russell Jack and Mr. H. Travers, while the groomsmen were Mr. Quigley and Mr. John Trayers. Outside of the relatives of the bride very few guests were present. Among those were Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Weldon, Col. McShane, Dr. and Mrs. Inches, Dr. and Mrs. McAvenny, Dr. Daniel, Dr. Bruce, Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Ritchie, Mr. Charles Doherty, Mrs. S. R. Thomson and Miss McDonnell. The bride was the recipient of many very valuable gifts the groom's present being a very pretty gold brooch, in the shape of a wish bone studded with diamonds. His present to the brides maids were handsome gold and pearl bangles. After the celebration of the nuptial mass, which service was performed by his lordship Bishop Sweeny, uncle of the bride, assisted by Revs. T. T. Walsh and J. J. Donovan, the bridal party returned to the residence of Dr. Travers, where a very elegant degeuner awaited them. The table decorations were very handsome and unique, the wedding cake being ornamented with tiny parian figures, and the floral decorations most profuse and elaborate. The bride and groom left for an extended tour through the states. and on their return will reside on Douglas will play for the first time on Sunday next. Mr. and Mrs. Strande are boarding with Mrs. Hastings, Quite a large number of people were present at he tennis grounds, last Saturday afternoon, it being

A most enjoyable euchre party was given by Mrs. Bayard at her residence, Germain street, on Thursday evening last, when upwards of 40 guests were present. Play was kept up till quite late in the evening, when the party were ushered into the spacious dining room, where a handsome and most recherche supper was served, after which dancing was indulged in for the remainder of the evening. Euchre prizes were presented to the successful players. Among the invited guests were Mr. and Mrs. Busby, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Winslow, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm MacKay, Mr. and Mrs. James Straon, Dr. and Mrs. Murray-McLaren, Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Sturdee, Miss Warner, Miss Hazen, Miss Mc-Millan, Miss King, Miss Richey, Miss M. JUNE 5 .- At least two events of very decided social importance have transpired during the past week. To take them in the order of their occurrence, first comes the performance of Caste, by the amateur dramatic club, at the opera house last Thursday evening, which deserves a full description, for it was very nearly, if not quite, equal to professional work. The club certainly covered itself with glory. I cannot truthfully say that the stage was heaped with floral tributes, but the frequent bursts of applause testified the appreciation of the audience, which was in every respect a most enthusiastic one, and must have gone a long way towards giving the actors that feeling of confidence in themseives which is the first essential of good acting. There was an evenness about the performance which is rather unusual with amateurs, each part being admirably well suited to the actor who was chosen to interpret it.

Mrs. J. S. Benedict played the difficult role of the heroine, Esther Eccles, in a most artistic and graceful manner. The part is perhaps the most trying one of the whole piece, calling for emotional acting all through, and entirely unrelieved by any of those touches of humor which sometimes lighten the monotony of a serious part.

One of the most delightful innovations introduced by the amateurs was the singing of Schubert's-at least I think it is Schubert's-exquisite song, "The Maid of the Mill," by Mrs. Benedict, which received a rapturous encore.

Mrs. J. R. Bruce, as the saucy, charming ballet dancer, Polly Eccles, captured the audience on her first appearance, and from the moment she set her foot on the stage till she embraced Sam, for the last time as the curtain fell, she held her place as the the opening day. Tea and refreshments were served undisputed favorite, her mere appearance on the by several young ladies who shared the responsi- stage being the signal for a storm of applause. She pility of hostesses. I suppose others will follow was so bright, so original, so overflowing with fun, heir example and visitors will hope during the had such a dangerously warm temper, when summer to be treated equally as well each Saturday aroused, and was so very, very pretty. In her address to the army of France, marshalled in imaginary array before her, she was inimitable. In her quarrel with her lover. Sam Gerridge, one felt grateful that the footlights were between the helpless audience and the pretty little fury. And in her touching loyalty to and defence of her drunken father, she showed herself a true woman. Her ease and self possession on the stage were truly wonderful for an amateur, and she proved herself to be literally "mistress of herself, though china fall." For, although there was a very considerable fall of china during the performance, she never lost her self-possession for a moment.

As for Miss Campbell, who took the part of the hero's haughty, patrician mother, the Marquise de St. Maur, I can only say that she looked and acted the part to perfection, and was sufficiently majestic in her cold hauteur to freeze the blood in any poor

Mr. W. E. Stavert, as the Hon. George D'Alroy, Burpee, and others. This entertainment prevented had a part almost equal in difficulty to that of Mrs.

Benedict; but his handsome face and fine figure, coupled with a peculiar earnestness of manner which gave force to his acting, and a full, deep voice, helped wonderfully in rendering the role attractive. His devotion to his humbly-born wife, and his sturdy pride in her were very touching. Mr. Butcher, as D'Alroy's friend, the military swell, Capt. Hantree, was, as usual, a prime favorite. He was as quaintly amusing as ever, one of his particular charms being that you are kept in a constant state of expectation, while he is on the never-feelingquite-sure-what-he-will-do-next, but certain that it will be something amusing.

Of Mr. Paver it seems but fair to say that he is hardly to be classed among amateurs: he is so very nearly a professional actor. No smallest trifle is ever lacking to make his acting perfect. He is master of every little detail of make-up, every trick of expression that goes to make a perfect whole. And he never showed to greater advantage-in one way-than on Thursday evening, though he was very far from being a favorite with the audience, having the thankless part of villain. He was so perfectly the drunken wretch Eccles, that those who watched him walking home unconsciously wondered how he had managed to "sober-up" so soon. Dr. Murray, as Sam Gerridge, the good-hearted but vulgar young "plummer," to whom Polly was engaged, certainly divided the honors with Polly herself, he was so perfectly natural, so self-possessed and so thoroughly capable of keeping up his own end of the quarrel with his peppery little lady love. His being on the eve of matrimony with a very charming young Moncton lady, and being actually engaged in furnishing his house, lent a particular point to the scene, where he insists on dragging in show Polly, and it very naturally brought down the the entertainment by their choice selections between acts. The costumes worn by the performers were really worthy of note, and rivalled those of many professional companies for freshness and beauty. In the first act Mrs. Benedict wore a walking dress of navy blue sateen, made up with the same material in large plaids of navy blue and white. With large black hat and plumes, Mrs. Bruce wore a dress of cardinal cashmers trimmed with plush of the same shade, and little sailor hat of cardinal straw. D'Alroy and Hantree in plain clothes, Sam Gerridge, workman's blouse and paper cap.

In the second act Mrs. Benedict wore a dress of heliotrope silk, with long train, lace draperies and gold ornaments; Mrs. Bruce, a dress of cream colored cashmere trimmed with poppy red watered silk and poppy red sash, large white hat and silver court train, jet and silk mantle and amber, amber ornaments; D'Alroy and Hantree, full dress artillery uniform.

Third act, Mrs. Benedict wore widow's mourning: Mrs. Bruce, walking dress of black and white, large black hat; Miss Campbell, walking dress of black satin covered with jet, jet mantle and bonnet, black gloves; Sam Gerridge, very smart Sunday suit, with scarlet tie; Hantree, plain clothes; Eccles, generally dishevelled, battered hat, red cotton handkerchief and "disguised in liquor."

And now Geoffrey Cuthbert Strange, what have you got to say about it?

The second and more important social event to which I referred was the marriage of Miss Bessie Macgowan to Dr. C. A. Murray, which happy event ook place last evening at the Methodist church. The evening was a most a most inclement one, the rain coming down in sheets, without cessation from tea time till after 10 o'clock. Nevertheless. long before nine, the hour fixed for the ceremony,
