STANLEY OF PRESTON.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL SEES WHAT ST. JOHN IS LIKE.

The Common Council Hurl on Address at Him—Some Points He Got at the Levee—He Visits the Exhibition and Signs the Register of "Progress."

(From PROGRESS Exhibition Daily Evening Edition, Oct. 3rd.)

Nineteen guns went off, one after another, from the top of Fort Howe, as the train containing the Governor General, Lady Stanley and his Excellency's suite, rolled into the depot yesterday noon. Gov.
Tilley, Mayor Lockhart and some other notables were on hand to escort the distinguished visitors to carriages. As Lord Stanley entered his barouche Dennis Costigan and Martin O'Neil approached, shook him by the hand and welcomed him to the city of the Loyalists.

George Moffatt was giving an organ recital at Chalmers' corner when the guns began, and with a full realization of the situation he stopped playing "Rescue the Perishing" and started "God Save the Queen."

The governor general and party were then driven around the city to see the objects of interest. His excellency took a look at the mud holes on Mill street, and for a moment his face had an enigmatical expression which was not seen again until he saw the W. C. T. U. fountain at the head of King street. He was not shown the Mount Pleasant retaining wall, but it is reported that he was very much interested in the engine house now building on Union street. When it was explained to him that the bulging granite piers at the end of the doorways must all be chiseled down by hand, so that doors could be put to the structure, he murmured, "Very extraordinary, indeed."

The governor general is only human, however, and he had to go back to his car for luncheon at 1 o'clock. The police arrangements were so perfect that neither in going to or coming from the depot did the restaurant and hotel men have the ghost of a chance of capturing him for a "hot dinner"—only 25 cents, right handy here—just step this way.

After luncheon Lord and Lady Stanley were driven to the court house. The address by the common council was brief, and was read by B. Lester Peters with impressive dignity. Lord Stanley made an impromptu reply, and then before any of the aldermen had a chance to get up and make speeches the grand levee began.

A number of St. John's beauty and chivalry assembled in the probate court room and had a nice little social time.
While they awaited their excellencies, B.
Lester Peters circulated gaily with white tie, many seemed under the impression that then was the proper time to deposit their cards, and there was the place, so they laid them down on the large table with a child like confidence that they would get there somehow, as poultry get to roost, and when the time really did arrive some were minus one card and some hadn't any.

After a long period spent in conversation and anxious speculation as to whether your dress was as good as your neighbor's, and your tie in the centre of gravity, a slight hustle in the vestibule announced the arrival of the governor general and suite. This was the signal for a general stand up and sit down again on the part of the loyal crowd, who were still uncertain as to where the reception proper would be held. Magnificent beings in gold lace hustled around and failed to impart any information whatever, and judging by the after proceedings, they had the best of reasons for not shedding forth information.

In the absence of instructions of any kind, the crowd made a start in the direction of the ante-room to the common council chamber, only to be informed by some bright being, whose voice was the only thing visible, that "This is not the place to come in; this is where you go out; you don't want to be meeting in the middle of the room, do you?"

By this time the aldermen had straggled in to the august presence in an easy, happy-go-lucky manner, that must have made their excellencies feel perfectly at home and real sociable. B. Lester Peters was reading the address of welcome, and every faculty but that of hearing was suspended for the time being, on the part of the audience.

Then the reception came, and also a very warm disagreement amongst the powers that be as to the manner of conducting the same.

The arrangements seemed to have been left to the inspiration of the moment, which somehow failed to connect, and confusion ensued. There was a crush at the ante room door, where everyone tried to get out at once, and a number of gentlemen talked very loud in the "You did," "I didn't," "You did," "You're another," style, and for a few minutes there seemed a reasonable prospect of a free fight in which Queensbury rules would be at a discount and the London prize ring rules would have scarcely more show. If their excellencies heard the scuffle—and unless they are slightly deaf they must have done so—they probably imagined that some contumacious prisoner was being hustled out of the court house, to make room for the reception.

Peace was restored at last, and the loyal citizens filed slowly in the council chamber where their excellencies stood within the railing. "Ladies first" seemed to be the rule, but the ladies who were fortunate enough to be accompanied by gentlemen, clung to their escorts to the bitter end, as the ultra fashionable dame clings to her maiden name after she is married—and all passed in single file before Lord and Lady Stanley, first handing their card to Colonel Armstrong, who acted as chamberlain. Their Excellencies had a cordial smile, and a warm handclasp for every one.

Those who had been presented retired into temporary obscurity, and criticized the bows of their friends as they passed.
Many and various were the styles of obscurity. Some of the upper crust who did not want to seem vulgar and do as others did, omitted this part of the performance altogether and passed their excellencies with an easy nonchalance—a graceful pas beaucoup handshake, which seemed to the irreverent onlooker to say, "How do pard? shake! Ta-ta!" and elsewhere.

The lush gloom of the elsewhere one of the most self-possessed attendants at the reception, who won warm encomiums upon his polished manners and graceful bearing, was a large sized fox terrier, with an intelligent countenance and grimy complexion, who participated in all the ceremonies and was a prominent feature of the entertainment.

Lady Stanley is a charming matron, still upon the sunny side of middle life, whom it is almost impossible to believe can be the mother of so grown up a son as Mr. Edward Stanley and nine others. She has the fresh, beautiful complexion of all her country women, dark blue eyes, perfect teeth, and a most charming smile.

Mr. Edward Stanley, the A. D. C., has a frank handsome face, beautiful dark blue eyes, and a tall soldierly figure.

Lady Stanley wore a very plain travelling dress of costume cloth of darkest brown with border, and corsage trimming, in silver grey embroidery, small black lace bonnet, and no jewellery.

Sir Leonard and Lady Tilley occupied a position at the left of the dais beside their excellencies. Lady Tilley wore a very elegant costume of black striped moire and satin with black lace bonnet.

After the reception the Governor General and party filed out to their carriages without ceremony; there was no attempt at forming a guard of honor; the effort of keeping the loyal citizens sufficiently at bay to let the vice-regal party out developing upon the aldermen or anyone else who would take the trouble.

Then the vice regal party drove to the Exhibition building. The crowd was on the watch for it, and when four colored gentlemen wearing red, grey and buff coats and pug hats, entered the gate the rural visitors made a rush under the impression that the staff had arrived. A moment later the advertisement of a Montreal cigar firm was seen on the backs of the coats, and the crowd began to think that either the governor-general was in the advertising business or that there was a mistake somewhere.

When the distinguished visitors did come there was very little excitement. His excellency did not bring a band with him, but the blind man outside the gate gave "The Campbells Are Coming," with a vigor worthy of the occasion.

His Excellency walked into the building with Chairman Everett, Mayor Lockhart, and Ald. Connor close behind. He went at once to the Trinidad exhibit, but if his Excellency was after a nip of the Bouquet he got disappointed. Mr. Mc-Leod had only a little left, and the crowd looked too big and too thirsty. Mr.
Everett picked up a glass jar of sugar and told the Lord Stanley something—probably that it was sugar. Then Ald. Connor saw his opportunity, and picking up some strands of the remarkable fibre indigenous to the island, began to tell his excellency about rope making. Mr. Everett looked very cross, and he was as cross as he looked. Lord Stanley was his property in the exhibition building and Connor had no business to try and steal him. Besides, strangers were crowding around and mistaking the alderman for the governor general. Mr. Everett tried to seem unconcerned, and in an absent-minded sort of a way he removed a card which, apparently by accident, lay over the face of a framed photograph. This unveiling disclosed a perfectly nude native female of Trinidad, whereupon Mr. Everett's face assumed a look of chaste indignation, and he turned to see if Ald. Connor had got through with his lecture.

Apparently he had not. There were several varieties of fibre, and Connor had studied the points of each. The band was playing "Come Back to Erin." Mr.
Everett looked at Mayor Lockhart, and then by a bold and vigorous stroke succeeded in recapturing his vice regal prize and carrying him off to the fruit exhibit before he had seen half that the Trinidad space contained. He was so proud of the feat that he took off his hat as he led the way, but suddenly remembering that early piety and deep thought had created a section of a billiard ball, "in the place where the wool ought to grow," he clapped the hat on his head again.

In the meantime the strangers were trying to find out which was the governor general. Most of them thought that the tall, manly looking fellow in uniform was the man, but he was only the military secretary, Mr. Edward Stanley. If he lives long enough he will be the Earl of Derby.
The most ignorant stranger recognized him as an English gentleman from the way in which he gracefully accepted for Lord and Lady Stanley samples from exhibitors.

The latter appeared to think that it was part of his business to carry parcels, and he did not deceive them lest he should hurt their feelings.

Lord Stanley himself is a very unassum-ing man, but he has had a splendid training not only in British politics, but in colonial affairs. He was dressed unobtrusively in black, with plug hat, turn down collar and black four-in-hand necktie. The only noticeable ornament was a gold watch and chain. If it were possible to put Alds.
Peters and Blizard, Chief Engineer Kerr and Lord Stanley in a group, in New York, and ask the public to record guesses as to which was the Governor General, his excellency would probably come out last on the list.

There were many others in the party who put on more style than the vice-regent.
The aldermen were there with silver plug hats and Sunday clothes. Most of them wore tea roses as boutonnieres. To see Ald. Barnes, no one would have thought that he ever ran with Boss Tweed's "Big Six," and if Ald. Blackadar had ever gone to a fire in the dude clothes he was in, the boys on Three's pipe would have turned the hose on him.

The North End aldermen showed up well. Ald. Chesley is a working man, and always wears a slouch hat. In honor of the occasion he assumed a neat derby.
Ald. Blizard was pointed out as the man who had called for three cheers for Lord Stanley, after the suite had driven away from the court house. The alderman looked like a gentleman, as he always does, ornaments, gold watch chain, and tea rose.

High Constable George Stockford looked really magnificent. The heat and excitement had given him a face a crushed strawberry tint, which stood out in splendid contrast with his immaculate white waistcoat.
He carried a baton in his hand and wore the red rose of England in his buttonhole.
The country people thought he was the mayor.

Lieut.-Col. John Russell Armstrong, A. D. C. to Governor Tilley, wore the resplendent uniform which makes him look so handsome on state occasions. He has put on some flesh since it was built, and it fits him to a dot. Yesterday was a warm day and the colonel looked as though he would feel infinitely more comfortable in a linen ulster and straw hat.

Major Alfred Markham looked fine, as usual, and lots of people thought he was Lord Stanley.

Special policeman Fred Langan was relieved from duty in the building at 8 o'clock yesterday morning and reported to Chief Clark, the man of the striking uniform. When the governor-general arrived Adjutant Fred Langan, of the artillery, wore a uniform which might well make the chief pale with envy.

Ensign Jack Vroom had been hard at work around the gates Wednesday, but he was around in uniform with the party. He should not wear a bear skin. It conceals his wealth of golden hair. When he took off his head gear people thought he resembled the Prince of Wales, when he was here in 1860.

Sam, Napier, the man who found the big nugget in Australia and who used to raise Cain in the House of Assembly, rushed up to Lord Stanley and shook him by the hand.

Mr. Everett stuck close to his excellency, and so did Ald. Connor. W. M.
Jarvis was in the rear with a smile of intense satisfaction on his face. Mayor Lockhart looked as though he would like to talk, but could not get a chance.

Recorder Jack wore a morning suit and a sweet smile.

Common Clerk Peters did not walk in the procession, but amused himself by studying some of the oil paintings in the art gallery.

Ald. T. W. Peters is nothing if not accurate, in the matter of dress. He was attired with his usual good taste. He wore a delicate boutonniere, and an elegant tie.

The rest of the procession was like the contents of the sheet let down to St.
Peter, wherein were all manner of things clean and unclean. There were officers, aldermen, directors, committing up the rear, tag, rag and bobtail brought up the rear.

Mr. Everett walked Lord Stanley around the main floor and galleries, doing his best to keep Ald. Connor from getting a word in edgewise. Charles A. had never succeeded in getting to Ottawa, and when Ottawa came to him he had to make the most of the occasion. It is not every day that he can tote a live governor general around.

His excellency had to see the school exhibit of course, and despite the fact that Secretary March, on one side, and Supt.
Hayes, on the other, tried to make him look at two books at the same time, he seemed slightly interested.

He was interested, too, when he saw the model of the ship railway. The young man in charge got very red while tugging at the levers, and he got redder still when Lord Stanley shook hands with him and thanked him.

His excellency was marched around the main floor, with Mr. Everett and Ald.
Connor as rival cicerones, while two city newspaper reporters, notebooks in hand, tried to catch the words of wisdom that dropped from the vice-regal lips.

Lord Stanley has seen exhibitions before. He tried not to look tired, but when the band played,

All the world is sad and dreary, Everywhere I roam,
I wish I was in the land of cotton, And his excellency looked as though he would like to say amen.

Then they all descended to machinery hall. Lord Stanley has travelled around enough to know all about farming machinery, but Mr. Everett tried to keep his attention on the Patterson binder, so that he would not be interested in PROGRESS office, on the other side of the aisle. It was very kind of Mr. Everett, but despite of his well meant efforts Stanley of Preston and his son, the future Earl of Derby, signed the visitors' register before they left the hall.

Then they went up stairs, climbed on the band stand and Mr. Everett made a little speech. Lord Stanley, in the course of his reply said, in regard to his being called on to speak, that a few drops of the bitter were always mingled with the sweet, whereupon Mr. McLeod hunted up a sample bottle of Augustura and prepared to open a bottle of Bouquet. But that was not what his excellency meant.

Lord Stanley dined with Governor Tilley, in the evening, and there is no doubt he had a very good dinner indeed.
