THE WORLD OF BOOKS.

The question of hours of labor is discussed by General Walker in the Atlantic for June. The author of the article will be remembered as the writer of a criticism of Mr. Bellamy's "Looking Backward," which appeared in the Atlantic, and to which Mr Bellamy replied at some length. General Walker has made social questions a study, and his criticisms and suggestions on the present "Eight-Hour Law Agitation" come from a man more fully fitted to speak with authority than almost any one in the United States. Charles Dudley Warner's article on "The Novel and the Common School," is a keen analysis of the duty of the public schools in the supply of reading for our young citizens. This and Hannis Taylor's consideration of "National House of Representatives: Its Growing Inefficiency as a Legislative Body," are the two articles which make up the solid read- literature were evidently non-existent for ing of the number. Miss Repplier has a him, and I have heard of his passing other whimsical paper called "A Short Defense equally prominent men with cold disdain of Villains"; and Dr. Holmes discusses "Book-hunger," the uses of cranks, and tells a curious story, entitled "The Terrible | casion. Clock." Speaking of cranks, he makes one of the Teacups say, "Do you want to know why that name is given to the men who do most for the world's progress? It is because the cranks make all the wheels and all the machinery of the world go round. I suppose the first fool that looked on the first crank that was ever made asked what that crooked, queerlooking thing was good for." Mrs. Deland's "Sidney" and the second part of "Rod's Salvation," furnish the fiction of this issue, and there are two poems, an account of a pilgrimage to the localities immortalized in the legends of King Arthur, and several short papers of interest.

"The Children of Tomorrow."*

The poet William Sharp has followed the example of other famous poets and essayists of our generation and written a novel, and, like Robert Louis Stevenson longing as they did to the West End F. and Hall Caine, he has written a very good | F's. So the relations between the canine one—The Children of Tomorrow. The name "Children of Tomorrow" is explained

"We 'Children of tomorrow' are Jews in all verity, though perhaps we have no "Peter" felt that his own dignity demanded right to adopt a name which our Dutch compatriot Siwaarmill has bestowed in no

"May I ask what Siwaarmill's words are?" "They are in Dutch but they run thus: 'We, who live more intensely and suffer more acutely than others are the "Children of tomorrow," because in us the new forces of the future are already astir or even tion was caused by a super-fastidiousness but to those of all peoples who, as he says, live more intensely and suffer more acutely than others. He sees, as do many of us, that the old conventionalities, the old moralities even, in process of rapid evolution, if not of dissolution, and he perceives that now, as always heretofore, the future is foreshadowed in the present, the tomorrow is told in certain vivid moments of today." Mr. Sharp has the courage of his theory, making his brilliant hero, Felix Dane, willing to see Mrs. Dane, with whom he has nothing in common, in love with Gabriel Ford whom he loathes; and making his exquisite heroine, a Jewess named Sanpriel Acosta, offer to live with Dane as his mistress because she loves him so passionately and her father has cursed her if ever she should marry a Christian The book on his ability as a watch dog, even though is exceedingly clever—tull of surprises, such as Gabriel Ford's murdering Mrs. Dane, the woman he idolises, the refined and etherial Sanpriel's offering to become Felix's mistress, the sudden death of Felix and Sanpriel leaving the reader in doubt it they have commenced this relation, Felix's destroying the sculpture that would have won him his "R. A.," &c. The story is constantly developing new situations. It is briefly this. Felix Dane, a prosperous and successful young sculptor, has a rich, beautiful and highly connected wife who is no nearer to him than the marble of his statues. She, as the story develops, proves to be in love with a rich young Jew named Gabriel Ford, who moves in good Christian society, concealing his Jewish birth, but among the Jews pretends to be a leader in the Jewish national movement. Then besides sundry minor characters there are the famous musician Adama Acosta and his exquisite daughter Sanpriel, a poetess, with whom Felix Dane falls triumphantly in love, thereby regenerating his Art. The Acostas are "Children of tomorrow" and heart and soul in the Jewish national movement. The fact of his already having a wife makes no difference to the adoration which Felix lays | fierce feuds and battles which Scott has so at Sanpriel's feet, and which is returned. But after his wife's murder their marriage by a strong dramatic touch is prevented, and their sudden and violent death takes the reader quite unawares. It is wonderful what a short story Mr. Sharp has made out of these simple materials. Of course it goes without saying that, living the life he does in the Society of the most brilliant authors and artists of England, the bits of literary and artistic life are brilliantly and sympathetically done. And the hand of the poet is evidenced by two delightful songs ascribed to Sanpriel, as well as by the exquisite descriptions scattered through the book, and some of the moralizings put into the mouth of the sculptor and the

Mr. Sharp makes the part the Jews play in the story the vehicle for introducing or reintroducing to the English reader, that extraordinary woman Emma Lazarus, the greatest of all Jewish poets who have written in the Anglo-Saxon tongue. Anyone who has 'been through' American poetry lately, as I have for my Younger American Poets, must recognize the justness of Mr. the poems he alludes to, "The crowing of the red cock" and "The banner of the lew" in my anthology. Provided the red cock and the banner of the lew while I have them about me." Sharp's estimate. I have quoted two of Jew" in my anthology. But the book is addressed rather to the American audience, as the rebuke administered to the Critical fix them up when you have them returned?" Review (O thinly veiled) and the conversations about the Rubaiyat, so familiar to American readers from the beautiful editions of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., testify. This remarkable book will commend itself alike to the lover of dramatic situations, strong surprises and brilliant repartee, and to the fastidious reader, who enjoys fine writing, poetical passages, and sly satire. The successful poet, essayist and critic has added 'novelist' to his armory.—Douglas Sladen in the Japan Gazette.

RESIGNED FROM THE CITY CLUB.

A Member of the Select Moncton Coterie Retires for Good Reasons.

Moncton, May 21.—Intense excitement was caused in club circles last week by the report that "Peter" Cooke had formally resigned from all the rights and privileges accruing to those fortunate and high toned members of the sterner sex who are members of the Moncton City Club. There is no special reason assigned for the rash act, but friends of the late member say that for a long time past "Peter" has been acting in a very proud and haughty manner. I have never mentioned the fact before, but a short time ago "Peter" refused to recognize me on the street, the dignity of the press and the sovereignty of and uplifted nose on more than one oc-

It is an open secret in Moncton that, amid all our social enjoyment and good comradeship, there is an undercurrent which, though it flows quietly and gently, is still strong and deep. Perhaps I should have said two currents, not the flesh and the spirit, but the East and West Ends, and these two war the one against the other. "Peter" represented the East End, and being the only canine member from that part of the town he was naturally inclined to give himself airs, both on that account and also on the score of being the biggest dog in the club. "Buff" Archibald, "Gaunt," "Jerry" and "Rocket" considered that what they lacked in size they fully made up in aristocratic bearing, bemembers became so strained that "Peter" was virtually sent to coventry. Such treatment amounted to blackballing, and his resignation, which was finally sent in, as he preferred his own society to that of upstarts from the West End, who did not know a gentleman when they saw one.

I know that there has been a rumor extant to the effect that "Peter's" resignadominant.' Siwaarmill does not allude to on his part, which led him to object to the Jews or any other religious nationalities, club on the grounds that the stairs were not scrubbed with sufficient frequency, nor the ebony balustrade pipe clayed as often as he thought necessary. Neither is it true that he objected to Jamaica rum as a beverage. I know he drew the line at American whiskey, and cherished loyal objections to the American consul as a member of the club, but as long as the Star Spangled Banner was never hoisted from the masthead, he confined these sentiments to his own breast, and said nothing. The robbery which took place at the club rooms last winter preyed on his mind a good deal. It seemed a sort of reflection he was absent at the time. But his true reason for retiring from the City club is now for the first time made public.

ROB ROY'S SWORD.

The Claymore of the Famous Highland Chief on View in Brooklyn.

On one of the tables in the library of the Long Island Historical Society's building Brooklyn there lies an object that is more than ordinarily interesting. It is a sword bearing the marks of time, as well it may, for it is more than two centuries old. None but a strong man could wield it. Its original owner was a strong man, if what we read of him is true, for the battered sword in question is none other than the claymore of Rob Roy MacGregor, whose fame has been perpetuated for all time by the genius of Scott.

The wars of the Highlanders were concluded long ago, but looking at this great blade one can almost imagine that those graphically depicted were but things of yesterday. Rob Roy's blade was not drawn in the fights of the Highlanders alone, for it was swung right sturdily in many of the battles over the border between the Cavaliers and the Covenanters.

The famous claymore is about five feet long, weighs some fifteen pounds, and has broad, two-edged blade of the finest tempered steel. It has a basket hilt of strongly wrought brass, so fashioned that the weapon could be used with one hand or both. This was at one time covered with leather, which has been worn away by time and hard use. There is a wee piece left, however, on which the name "Rob Roy," with the exception of the first letter, may still be seen. The blade, though much nicked, is as strong as it ever was.-N. Y. RECAMIER SARSAPARILLA.

The safety of human life depends upon a proper observance of all natural laws, and the use in cases of sickness of only such medicines as are known to be of greatest value. In this unusual Spring season, after a Winter remarkable for the sickness which prevailed, a Blood Purifier and Tonic is needed to expel from the life current every trace of impure matter, and to stimulate, strengthen and build up the system and prepare it for the warmer weather of Summer. To accomplish this should be freely used, as a Blood Purifier of the highest value. It acts with quick yet pleasant potency upon the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Bowels. Is cleansing, soothing and invigorating, reconstructs the wasted tissues, restoring to the entire system perfect health. By its use Catarrh can be cured by the expulsion of the scrofulous taint from which the disease arises, neutralizing the acidity of the blood. To sufferers from Rheumatism there is nothing like it in the world. It will effect a cure where cure is possible.
