THE WORLD OF BOOKS.

Nutshell Novels is the title of a new volume of stories by J. Ashby-Sterry, which will be issued immediately.

A new novel by Mr. Crawford, who is one of the most industrious of living writers, is to begin soon in the English Illustrated Magazine-The Witch of Frague.

Thomas Stinson Jarvis, the author of Geoffrey Hampstead, is a barrister by profession, and lives in Toronto. This story of out-of-door life is his first attempt at novel writing.

According to the Bangor Commercial Miss Blanch Willis Howard, the author of One Summer, Guenn, The Open Door, was married recently at Stuttgart, Germany, to Dr. Teufel, of that city. The bridegroom is said to be court physician, and a man of wealth and high social posi-

The Story of Scotland, by James Mackintosh, will be the September volume in the Story of the Nations Series, published by the Putnams.

Two volumes by Eugene Field, the witty and entertaining Chicago writer, who has been passing the past year or so abroad, will be published this month by the Scribners—A Little Book of Western Verse and A Little Book of Profitable Tales.

The third volume in the Adventure Series, to be published this month by Macmillan, is Pellow's Adventures and Sufferings During his Twenty-three Year's Captivity in Morocco, edited by Dr. Robert Brown. An edition of Shelley's complete poetical works, edited by Professor Dowden, and issued in a single volume of the same size as the onevolume editions of Tennyson and Wordsworth, will be published by the same

New editions are forthcoming this month, from the press of Scribners, of Daniel C. Beard's popular American Boy's Hand Book, with considerable additions to both text and illustrations, and of Lina and Adelia B. Beard's companion and equally popular volume, American Girl's Handy Book, the price of the latter being reduced. Edward Eggleston's two well-known Western stories, Roxy and The Circuit Rider, are to be issued by the same firm in a new uniform binding.

The London Daily News has this gossip about the engagement of Mlle. Jeanne Hugo and the only son of Alphonse Daudet, the novelist. "Young M. Daudet is two years older than his betrothed, and will eventually inherit a large fortune from his mother. Mlle. Hugo has beauty and sweet manners. She is already rich, but will be considerably wealthier on the death of her aunt, Adele. Her marriage will be de-layed until she is of age, the will of Victor Hugo being so drawn up that her guardians have no power to sign settlements, or indeed to do anything save to deal with copyrights of his works. She and her brother have inherited half of his fortune, and their aunt the other half."

"The ivy," says the Critic, "which surrounds Thackeray's grave in Kensall Green Cemetery, and which had spread over nearly the entire surface of the plain tabular stone, obscuring the modest inscription, has recently been neatly trimmed. Time is beginning to leave traces on the monument erected in the same cemetery by admiring friends nearly thirty years ago. The massive head of the poet and humorist -immediately underneath which is his selfchosen epitaph, 'He Sang the Song of the Shirt'-stands sorely in need of cleaning, while the figures on the pedestal, one side of which represents a touching scene in the "Bridge of Sighs," are in no less need of

The fifth volume of Henry Morley's English Writers, ending with a review of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, will be published this month by the Cassell Publishing Company. The same firm announces for publication in the next few weeks, The Anglomaniacs, the clever story that has been read in the Century; a new novel by a new author, who hides his identity under the nom de plume of Daniel Dane.

Richard Blackmore, the author of Lorna Doone, was born at Longworth, Berkshire, in 1825. His mother was a descendant of the good old Dr. Doddridge, and his father was a minister, Rev. John Blackmore. His education was principally at Liverton School and Exeter College. He studied law and was admitted, but never practised except as a conveyancer. He now lives at Leddington, on the Thames, where he interests himself in gardening. He owns one of the largest market gardens in England. He is seldom seen in London, and knows very few of his fellow-authors. He surrounds himself with fruit trees and flowers, and pursues the vocation of literature with the avocation of market gardening, and is known to his neighbors not as Blackmore the author, but as Blackmore, the
