VELVET SLEEVES TO GO. SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

SOME OF THE NEWEST THINGS IN FASHION WORLD.

Clinging Skirts Hold Their Own-Velvet the Popular Trimming for Plaids-The Evening Dress Wear and the Cosy Fur

Fashion has issued her edict against velvet sleeves, and so, like the down trodden heathen Chinee, the velvet sleeve must go and become a thing of shreds and tatters, as far as popularity goes. And "pity 'tis" for it was a fancy that gave a very pretty effect to a gown, though it certainly had the drawback of riveting the wearer so firmly into her out of door jacket, that once she got into it, there was no getting out, single handed. Fortunately in bidding farewell to the velvet sleeve, we shall also get rid of its concomitant, the strip of velvet across the front breadths which always looked to me as if the material had given out unexpectedly, or else that the wearer's -hem-underskirt, had slipped down, and was coming off.

Clinging skirts still hold their own, sometimes cut on the bias of the goods, with just a few pleats at the hip to give a slight fullness to the skirt, and sometimes perfectly plain. But nevertheless fashion inclines yery decidedly towards heavily trimmed skirts in the near future. Battlemented borders are already seen frequently and the very newest thing is supposed to be a ruche, and a full one at that. Across the front breadths, and even sometimes all around the foot of the dress, flounces are also seen on some imported dresses, and I suppose we may bless our stars, those of us who have sense enough to do so, if we don't have a revival of crinoline soon. For street toilettes cloth with a fuzzy, flakey surface, is the favorite. Indeed some of these goods closely resemble the snowflake cloths of ten years ago, plaids predominate largely, and they are large in every sense of the word, even in price, for they are to be so popular this season that they come in very high priced goods. Some of them have a most curious effect imparted to them by large spots at regular intervals, but rather far apart,

Thursday, to take up their permanent residence in Moncton. Dorchester's loss will be our gain in this surface, or, to the highly imaginative mind, like a regular succession of grease spots about the size of a half dollar. Of course they must be quite the thing, because they are fashionable, but, quite between ourselves, they are not pretty.

Always have the plaid shirts cut bias, and have the basque made of plain material in the prevailing tint of the plaid, with plaid sleeves. If you should have the basque of plaid, be sure to have as few seams in it as possible, a stretched bodice is the correct thing if you are sure of a fit and can depend on your dressmaker, such a bodice is fastened under the arms and on the left shoulder with invisible hooks and eyes. If it be properly made the puzzled spectator will spend some time in speculating as to how the wearer gets into it, especially if he should chance to be of the Velvet is the popular trimming for plaids, as it seems to combine particularly well with such goods. In colors, brown is very popular, and there is a decided preference for a golden tinge. Cadet blue, of course, holds its own, and heliotrope is still a favorite shade, especially for tea gowns and evening dresses.

Speaking of evening dresses, gold and gold lace will be more than ever a feature of the evening toilette of the coming season; gold lace in delicate vandyke patterns will be used for trimming, the points, of course, turned upward; white nets will be spotted with gold and also with silver; embroidery and black nets similarly decorated will also be much worn.

A very noticeable feature in evening dresses will be the panier draperies over the hips in quite the old style. This is a charming fashion and becoming to all, except the very stout. It gives a picturesque look to any dress, and insensibly carries one's mind back to shepherdesses, crooks, wee lambs. and lots of nice simple, pastoral things, far enough away from the modern ball room, though that is a very nice place too.

Evening bodices are, as a rule, laced in the back, and they fit well. They fit like the paper on the wall when the said paper was hung by a man, and one who understood his profession.

By the way, the boa, as well as the velvet sleeve, has had its day, and is now on its way to an early grave. The shoulder cape and the storm collar hold its place already, and I really think the boa was a fraud from the first. It looked very nice, but still it only kept your neck warm and tickled your ears, yea, and also the end of your nose, while the shoulder cape keeps you warm all over your chest and back; and the storm collar is simply too de-lightful for words to express half its charms; warm and cosy, soft and delicious, it clasps you in its tender embrace and shields you from the wintery blasts, till you almost imagine June weather has strayed into January. It comes above your ears and meets and shake hands with your fur cap, and is altogether lovely. Where is the man who invented it? Or was he a woman? Never mind, I kiss my hand to wraps and capes have this most sensible finish, and chills down one's back will be unknown this winter. I know a whole lot more about the fashions, as the gentleman who used to of A. E. Alexander, wholesale and retail dealer in tell such awful yarns used to say. "I 'ave a dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, hardware, school books, stationery, furniture, carriages and machinery. just give me time to think."

But I have used up all my space now, so I must put it off till another time.

Oct. 29.—"All is quiet on the Potomac," very quiet indeed, even to the verge of stagnation. Were it not for the revival now going on in town, and the intense ripple of excitement which has lately thrilled the upper circles of canine society, and shaken it to its very centre, I believe we should all be "nid-noddin' and droppin' off to sleep." When I speak of the revival, I don't of course, mean any sudden outbested of religious forces in our steady soing and break of religious fervor in our steady going and evenly pious town. I refer to the revival of hostilities between the Transcript and Times, whose little differences of opinion are a source of perennial delight to their readers, and serve to keep the ball of life rolling briskly in journalistic circles. The only fear is, that they will soon have exhausted their stock of expletives, and be obliged to stop fighting through sheer inability to think of anything e to call each other.

When one comes to count up the number of ladies who are out of town just now, the result is simply appalling, one feels inclined to cry, "All, all are gone from us!" and to begin writing the list of our
