THE RIGHT KIND OF MEN.

The men who are needed at the council board are not only such as have some interest in the city, but who have first-class business capacity. The affairs of the city are of too much importance to be entrusted to incompetent persons, whether they be rich or poor, for wealth in many cases does not presuppose ability any more than poverty indicates the lack of it. A great deal depends upon how the wealth was acquired, and who acquired it.

When, however, there can be found a man of means and leisure, with clean record and an ability for grasping public questions, such a man is likely to be a good representative, if he be honest and his motives are good. The man who, in the capacity of alderman, gives his attention to public affairs must have a certain amount of leisure, or be prepared to sacri- sonal fame, and the means he has adopted year. fice his own interests to those of the pub- to gain his ends have been the most extralic. It is, unfortunately, for this reason, that the best citizens are often unwilling to serve, and that men who have a good deal more time than money push themselves to defects of his character are insincerity and the front and are elected.

The fact that some of the best alderman at the board today are men whose own $500,000, all of which has been made in their best energies, shows, however, that a justice both to himself and the people whom he represents. It is purely a matter of system, which may not be arranged to suit all cases, but which can be applied without doubt in the majority of them.

It is honest workers who are needed at the council. There are too many talkers there already. The alderman who makes speches may be an ornament at times, but the alderman who is no orator, but acts with the conciousness that a trust is reposed is his very comfortable way of obeying the on him is something more than an ornament. The people prefer solid results to speeches. preach the Gospel to every creature.

The selection of a candidate simply because "the boys" will take hold of him is bad in principle. The "boys" are admittedly a good lot to have on one's side, but they are bright enough in most cases to support a good man, who has been brought forward for some other reason than that they will favor him. There is such a thing as suiting the boys and doing justice to the ratepayers as well.

The man who is intelligent in the conduct of his own affairs, honest in his dealings with others, who has mind enough to think for himself without the leadership of any man at the board, and who has no axe to grind for himself or his friends, is the right kind of a man for the

It will pay to elect such men, and the ratepayers should choose them now.

PROFESSIONAL JURORS.

One of the radical defects of the jury system in this part of the world is the class of men who do duty as jurors. To a large extent they are what are known as "professionals," selected because they have abundant leisure, are willing to serve, and are anxious to earn their fee of a dollar a

A sheriff will doubtless claim that it is difficult to get citizens to serve as jurors, that he summons men who are "poor but honest," and that substantial justice is done save in exceptional cases.

Why should it not be done in every case? That it is not is amply shown by authentic incidents published in Progress not long ago, where the jurors seemed to lack either common intelligence or common honesty. They were country juries, it is true, but there may be even graver causes for doubt in the case of city professionals.

The trouble is that men who are not fit for anything else, are not fit to weigh evidence and a true verdict give between plaintiff and defendant. If they are not biassed, they may be incompetent and are in the hands of the judge, who controlls them as he pleases. The judge in such cases is the jury as well. Perhaps, in many instances, it is in the interests of justice that he should be so. In such an event the jury is simply an unnecessary trouble and expense. The jury system is as right in theory as anything connected with the machinery of the law. In practice it is not, because the wrong kind of men are selected as jurors.

The character of an ordinary panel was shown in a recent criminal case when one after another of those selected to decide whatever difficult questions might arise in civil suits, were summarily bounced on account of old age and other infirmities. Are these the class of men to determine a man's right to property,-decide on conflicting statements and do the highest justice in an intricate case between man and man? Most of people would say not.

A gentleman who recently had a case in court, was accosted at the outset of the trial by an able-bodied "professional," who had not been selected to sit on that case, with the remark, "I wish I was in the box to help you out," or words to that effect. What did he mean? Did he imply that he was prepared to go info the jury box, under oath, with a previous determination to render a verdict in a certain way? If so, it would be interesting to know if such things happen often.

The professional juror may have his advantages in knowing his business, but there may be such a thing as his knowing it too well. Better men are required on juries all over the province. If they will not serve, it is time to consider whether the abolition of the jury system will not be in the interests of justice.

TALMAGE AND HIS METHODS

Whether or not Rev. T. DEWITT TAL-MAGE is a humbug is a question which the New York Sun is trying to solve. In the effort to do so it gives a striking pen-picture of the preacher, his aims and his methods. This picture is not a flattering one. If it be a true one, there is a good deal in support of an affirmative answer to the paper's pertinent query.

There is no charge against the private character or orthodoxy of the preacher. His creed is disposed of in the statement that he does not inflict much theology of any sort on his hearers. The gravest accusation is that "his object in life has been money getting and the achievement of perordinary that a minister of the Gospel who sought to retain an honest name ever resorted to." It is claimed that the great

Mr. TALMAGE is said to be worth affairs are sufficient of themselves to tax the last twenty years. He has a gross income of $40,000 a year, derived from his to be a boodler on a large scale active business man can in many cases do salary, his published sermons, his lectures, and his interest and dividend account. More than 500 newspapers in the United States print his sermons every week, to say nothing of an English syndicate and the Canadian papers. He was originally glad to supply his sermons to the press free, but his price increased with the demand, and finally he closed with a boilerplate concern to give it the advance copy at the rate of nearly $12,000 a year. This command, "Go ye into all the world, and

> These sermons are supplied to the boilerplate concern about two weeks in advance. The learned doctor sits back in a chair, dictates to a stenographer for an hour, and gets $250 each week for his trouble. The boiler-plate concern, in turn, gets $2 or so from more than 500 papers, leaving a handsome margin for profit. The only limit to the profit is that the sermons are supplied to only one paper in each place in the

The charge of humbug gets its greatest weight from the circumstances of TAL-MAGE's trip to the Holy Land. It is claimed that it was an advertising dodge to call attention to his forthcoming Life of CHRIST, suggested by the publishers, who paid all expenses. Before TALMAGE left, he prepared a lot of sermons, to cover each Sunday of his absence, to be printed as having been delivered at various places on the route. It was arranged that they should appear under the lying caption of cabled reports. This was denounced at the time as a shameful deception, made absolutely impious from the fact that the preacher utilized the most sacred spots which the feet of CHRIST had trod to further the purposes of his fraud upon the

When he reached Mount Calvary he tried to buy the ground for spot cash, and had he succeeded it would have been the biggest advertisement yet. He failed but "succeeded in purloining" a rock which he brought with him to be a corner-stone for his church. Later, reaching the Jordan, he was determined to immortalize himself by baptizing somebody in the sacred stream. As he tells the story, the convert was an American traveller who had been brought to repentance while travelling in the Holy Land, and the scene was most impressive. According to the Sun, the man was a dirty native tramp, whom TAL-MAGE seized, dragged in and soused under, as an advertisement of his own great self. In summing up, the assertion is made that though TALMAGE speaks to great multitudes he utterly fails to touch the hearts of his hearers. He is a professed follower of the meek and lowly CHRIST, and yet in the trip to Palestine, what a comparison between the two! He is selfish and apparently insincere. It would require a reverse of his wonderful prosperity to see the man in his true character. "It would," says the Sun, "make of him either | And in the face of all this the Scarill company label an infidel or a Christian."

A handsome folder, the design of which is justly credited to the energetic secretary of the Board of Trade, Ira Cornwall, the execution of the neat border letter-press to Mr. W. C. It is intended to advertise the St. John exhibition and it is quite probable that as many as The voters of Victoria ward will have only them- 500,000 copies of it will be printed and circulated. A large number of St. John merchants have placed their orders for advertising space on the back of the folder. The advertisement costs nothing, but in order to get it an order must be placed for so many thousand folders, which are light other points of superiority. and easily folded into envelope size. They are supposed to be sent out with invoices, statements, samples, correspondence, parcels, in fact distributed in every way possible. Two objects are gained—a wide and good advertisement for St. John and the exhibition and for the merchant's own business. Speaking of the folder the daily papers have this to say:

(From the Daily Telegraph.) The secretary of the Board of Trade has received proofs of the very handsome circular which has been designed for advertising the fall exhibition and St. John generally. The design was drawn by Walter C. Fairweather and reflects great credit upon this young artist. The engravers have executed their part of the work admirably. The first page contains a map of the maritime provinces, showing the various railways and steamship routes with some valuable marginal notes. In addition to this there is a comprehensive advertisement of the exhibition association and of the forthcoming exhibition. The second page contains some well executed views of the exhibition building, and a bird's eye view of St. John, and a view of St. John harbor with marginal references to the exhibition, references to the advantages of St. John for tourists and health seekers and the advantages of St. John as a port for export and import trade. The last page contains a map of the hemisphere showing the route of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Vancouver to St. John, with appropriate marginal notes. The balance of space is devoted to advertising purposes for the merchants and others who have ordered them.

More About Jerusalem.

TO THE EDITOR OF PROGRESS: I cannot let the remarks of "Tarbet," in your issue of Saturday last, relating to the music performed by Mr. Ford pass without again replying.

that he has never seen a copy of Salome's Cantaline. Then why presume to criticise matters of such delicacy as touch and expression? Hearing other people play the piece is not sufficient. A musical critic must be a thorough musician, theoretically, if not practically, able to judge for himself and able to speak for himself. Unfortunately, in "Tarbet" the lack of these qualities is conspicious. One of the organists mentioned by way of comparison assures me that he never has played

Strange that "Tarbet" should make such bold assertions when they prove to be utterly void of Doubtless, the gentlemen named are excellent musicians, but should any one of them have performed Salome's Cataline as suggested by "Tarbet," -whose recollection, by the way, on this important point may be somewhat cloudy-I say, with due respect for age and experience, they were wrong, and certainly ought to have known better.

The objection raised against the song, "Jerusalem," is most absurd, is most childish-the waltz like refrain or subject being one of the most beautiful features in modern sacred composition.

Nevertheless music of this class Tarbet thinks out of place in church. I suppose what applies to vocal will also apply to instrumental music. Now let us see what musical gems "Tarbet" would deprive the church of. Among as multitude of equally deserving compositions we cite: "Nazareth," "Calvary," overture to "Hymn of Praise," "How lovely are the Messengers," "As the Hart Pauts," &c., &c., any one of which could easily be converted into a waltz, being written in the "tempo" to which Tarbet strongly objects; saying nothing of the instrumental music of all the "Jerusalem" compares most favorably with

"Nazareth" particularly as to the melodic construction of the refrain, and if a person accepts the latter it becomes impossible to despise the former, unless prejudice exercises its influence to advantage. Certainly Henry Parker can write a song equal to Berthold Tours, and by such a comparison Tarbet has

To say the critism on the organ recital was just, would be fallacy. To say the reply to the letter of last week was anything like a satisfactory climax, would be equally false. The whole affair from beginning to end is a network of misconceptions, from which all the Tarbets in this wide world would struggle in vain to get disentangled.

Here is a case in point-one of many which might be taken for illustration: A concert was given not long ago in one of our city churches, at which some of our best musicians, both professional and amateur, appeared. The programme included two or three vocal solos, several organ solos, which were given with marked ability, and two numbers by an orchestra of twelve pieces. It was one of the best Inspector, Mr. T. B. Lavers, your cheque oncerts that I have had the pleasure of listening to in payment of Insurance held in the North for a long time. But how did the large audience present respond when the collection plate was passed round? Two-thirds of the amount received was in five cent pieces, and the remainder chiefly in tens, with a very small sprinkling of twenty-five cent pieces. The sum received averaged about seven cents per capita. Are St. John audiences disposed to be mean? would prefer to think that they are only thoughtless, and that they do not take into consideration the fact that there is no little expense incurred in gained for its prompt payment of claims.

ters it how little I put in, so long as nobody knows?" and govern themselves accordingly. Like the old story of the Eastern wedding, to which each guest was expected to bring a jug of wine, as his contribution towards the feast, and to empty it into a vessel set to receive it at the door. One said to himself, "One jug of water will never be detected in "Tarbet" admits, although unnecessary to do so, so much wine," and so took water. All had alike thought one jug of water would not injure so much wine, and had acted accordingly.

Perhaps the presence of so many five cent pieces in a silver collection may be similarly explained.
