PROGRESS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22.

Smote the chord of self that trembling passed in music out of sight."

Why you can see at a single glance that the chord of self must have passed very much out of sight to enable that single hearted musician to spend evening after evening of this bitterly cold weather keeping up a continual whistling chorus, to arise like incense to the shrine of his patron saint. He must also have trembled considerably I should think, for standing around in the cold "from 1) to 22 o'clock might well have the effect of chilling the most ardent temperament.

Can it be, oh local correspondent, that you were never young yourself, never felt the delicious madness of love, when 'All the heart was full of feeling love had ripened into speech Like the sap that turns to nectar in the velvet of the peach In the happy harvest fields as the sun sinks low."

Oh, sacrilegious "local," how shall you dare to judge that young man, to apply your shallow plummet and line to measure the depths of his feelings. Probably he was whistling soft nothings to some lady love. She may have been but a humble servant girl whose night out it was not, and her labors may have been sweetened by the sound of music without, because mayhap her mistress did not allow "followers."

Did you never serenade the object of your affections yourself in your far off youth? If you didn't you missed a lot of fun. Just think of creeping softly over the dewy sward on a lovely July night-because I was never sufficiently regardless of the dangers of influenza and the discomforts of cold feet to serenade in February-think, I say, of taking your tuneful guitar, or your faithful banjo, and bursting forth into "Slumber my lo-oved one, so-oftly, sweetly pe-a-cefully slu-um-ber" just beneath her window! When I think of it, I almost smell the blush roses now. Think of the gentle sound of her window softly rising, and another window on the upper flat doing the same, while her papa-but no! there are some sorrows too sacred to be dragged before the rude gaze of a mirth loving public-I will confine myself to the case in hand, and my mission shall be to console that persecuted youth for the cruel remarks with which the Daily Times has lacerated his feelings.

Whistle on, my dear boy, and let no fear of the heartless policeman deter you. The police force are proverbially insensible to the charms of music, but then I think their life is one to crush out all superfluous sentiment, so take heart of grace, knowing that you have at least one ardent sympathizer, who is with you in every fibre of his being, even though he prefers, like the late lamented Lord Byron, to do his own courting "by a sea coal fire."

A Stay of Proceedings.

Laura (rapturously) - I visit this romantic spot every year. Pigmentor (seriously)-Are your stays long? Laura (indignantly)—Sir! I took you for a gentleman, but I find I've been sadly mistaken.
