Woodstock on Saturday. The near approach of the opening of parliament tends to produce a slight flutter of excitement in circles social as well as political. Probably both members and ladies will be glad to find that the recent alterations in the assembly room will serve to make them better acquainted with each other, if seeing and being seen can be called acquaintanceas to being heard, that has yet to be submitted to the test of experience. It is certain, however, that with the new galleries coming down so much lower than before, with their hand-ome iron railing and seats raised in tiers so high that all can see, with the richly frescoed ceilings, part coloured walls and heavy curtains, the assembly room will be a very attractive spot, and will no doubt be abundantly patronized.
