I am glad this week to be able to	o give excellent news of the Bishop. He has been spending a month at Hyeres, and the climate of that resort has done a great deal toward restoring his health. Hyeres is not a very amusing place, its chief claim to notoriety just now is that it has been chosen by the Queen for her annual continental sojourn, a place which it is doubtful of fulfilment since the sudden death of her grandson, which is said to have shaken her Majesty very much and aged her pitiably.

Hyeres also possesses excellent golf links, a boon to most travelling Englishmen; but Bishop Courtenay is abroad in search of health not amusement, and this latter qualification does not, I suppose, particularly concern him. At all events he has just left for Rome, where, it is his present intention, to remain until the spring. And if his health continues to mend as it is now, we shall have him with us again

The death of the Duke of Clarence of course has a palpable effect on social events here. All official dinners had of course to be put off; the bands were forbidden to play; imperial troops and militia alike are to wear mourning till the twenty-sixth of February; and even since the news arrived of the death ruary; and ever since the news arrived of the death of the prince, the Royal Standard has been at half-mast on the citadel, a gloomy sight in the rain which has fallen almost steadily all the week. It is natural of course, that Prince George should be very popular here; but the conjectures one hears on every side as to whether he will not marry the princess to whom his brother was betrothed, do not seem in the best possible taste. The royal family are intensely German; they have a vast fund of senare intensely German; they have a vast fund of sentimentality which is equally balanced by shrewdness and common sense. If when they have got over the former, the latter inclines them to think such a match would be both advisable and popular, it is extremely likely to happen; but even the royal family who are hard headed and practical enough will not speak of their intention till the dead heir is cold in his grave.

A paragraph went the rounds of a few English papers about the first of the year, saying that Prince deorge had not then been told of his brother's engagement, as he had for a long time been himself in love with Princess May, and it was feared the announcement of her betrothal to his elder brother, might seriously affect him in his weak state of health, and impede his convalescence.

I hear that such a thing was never the case. The future and problematic matrimonial intentions of the sailor prince may as well be let alone. Time, and parental and grand parental authority, will probably elucidate them!

On Wednesday morning a solemn service in commemoration of the late Duke of Clarence was held in the Garrison chapel. The attendance of both officers and men of the garrison was voluntary, no or-der for their going having been issued. But the church was packed notwithstanding; and the good will of the soiders was shown by the fact that the question of religious denomination was set aside, and men who had perhaps never before entered an Anglican church came to this memorial service; all differences of creed for the nonce set aside. The order of service was most simple and impressive; a hymn, a few psalms, a lesson, the Nunc Dimittis, several collects and an address. Dimittis, several collects and an address.

The Rev. F. Norman Lee conducted the service; the lesson was read by Capt. Burnett, Leicestershire Regt; and the memorial address was given by the Rev. Heber Bullock, late chaptain of the forces, and honorary chaptain to the Queen, who gave a plain and direct aderess to the soldners on the death of their royal brother in-arms. The most solemn and impressive part of the service was perhaps the exquisite rendering by the full band of the Leicestershire Regt. of Beethoven's Grand Funeral March; and that most magnificent of all funeral marches. The that most magnificent of all fuueral marches. The Dead March in Saul, which they played in a way which thrilled to the heart even the unconcerned spectacle than from any other reason. In solemn silence, broken only by the clanking of swords, the tramping of many men, the congregation left the church, after a service as simply imposing and earnest as can be imagined.

I have wandered a long way from my chronicle of small beer; I beg to apologize to my readers, and return to it? That Sir John Ross, who is due here in March comes out accompanied by a new A. D. C., Mr. Whyte of the Guards, is old news to A. D. C., Mr. Whyte of the Guards, is old news to some people; but he is also to bring with him, I have just heard, as Military Secretary, Major Fergu on of the Rifle Brigade, from which corps the generals commanding here and there attaches seem to have been chiefly recruites for the past seven years. Lord Alexander Russel, Capt. Russell, Colonel Lane, Sir John Ross, Capt. Teabins and Major Maunsel were all Rifle Brigade men, Major Ferguson will make the seventh in succession.

I may add for the information of whom it may concern, that the new military secretary is unmar ried and possessed of some private fortune, whether he is unattached or not my information does not in-

Invitations are out for the silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Fairbanks. At least a hundred and fifty invitations have been issued, and the many friends of Mrs. Fairbanks have been surprised to hear that well known lady has really been married twenty-five years. Sir Edward and Lady Kenny are about the only people one can call to mind as having celebrated their golden wedding. It is to be hoped Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks will be spared to celebrate a like anniversary.

DARTMOUTH.

JAN. 20 .- The meeting of the Fortnightly club at Dr. Milsom's on Tuesday night was largely at tended, notwithstanding the fact that a large por tion of the population of the town is laid up with la grippe, but the regular members were reinforced by a number of gentlemen from Halifax, which went far towards filling the blank made by the victims of influenza. The Harpers were in attendance, but, as usual, left at eleven o'clock, just when everyone was about beginning to enter with zest into the dancing. However willing hands were not wanting to make the piano supply the lack, and the evening throughout was a most de-lightful one. The next meeting of the club will be held at Mr John Oland's. On Thursday there was an enjoyable social in the basement of St. James' church. These meetings of pastor and people are productive of much kindly feeling and interest among the members of the con gregation, and at no time was this church in such a hospitality. The number was composed of Miss Daisy's friends, and some of the grown up and middle aged as well; the night was most unpleasant and the walking vile, but those obstacles did not stand in the way of all who were invited getting there. There seemed to be some uncertainty as to what style of dress was called for, some being in plain house dress and a few in full party attire. Some of the gentlemen wisely preferring to err on the right side, wore their dress suits. The party broke up about one o'clock, everyone pronouncing on Friday night the W. C. T. and prevailing sickness. Between the hours of two and four, all places of business were closed, and flags at half-mast were raised on all the public buildings throughout the town. The floral tributes were very numerous and beautiful, among which were noticeable, a handsome wreath and cross with the letters "Y. T. C.," given by the Yarmouth town council; a very beautiful anchor from the Scotia lodge of free masons; a pillow of flowers from the Old Ladies' home; an anchor from Councilor G. G. Sanderson; an anchor and pillow from the odd fellows of the town; handsome flowers from Mrs. A. McLauchlin, beside several beautiful bouquets, and a sheaf of wheat and sickle of everlastings. The deceased was but 53 years of age, and his loss will be greatly felt by the people of the town. He leaves a wife and family of three, two daughters and a son, the latter, Mr. Leslie Lovitt, being one of the partners of the first mayor of Yarmouth, and had just completed his second year of and prevailing sickness.
