bers of those tribes can be called together. This year a large number being in this neighborhood, a summons was issued by Chief Joe Paul, of the Onondagas, to meet at Camp Comfort, a picturesque isle within easy walking distance of the town, where the dance was held with all the pomp of an Indian festival. The Onondagas made great preparations for the jubilee, and about twenty-five members of other tribes were present as guests.

The Onondagas, the Senecas, the Cayngas, the The Onondagas, the Senecas, the Cayngas, the Oueidas and the Tuscaroras comprise the six nations, and members of each participated in this fascinating dance around the camp fire. The moonlight streaming through the trees and the big camp fire casting fitful blazes made it so weird a scene that it can never be effaced from the minds of the pale faces who were permitted to see this ancient dance. Very few returned from the encampment with whole hearts, the fascination of the dusky maidens being more than even white hearts could stand; but efforts to steal them were always frustrated by the vigilance of the queen mother, whose The Onondagas, the Senecas, the Cayn trated by the vigilance of the queen mother, whose eyes were everywhere and who proved an excel-lent guide and protector to these wayward children
