H. Cierke, for the entertainment of their guests, Mr. and Miss Allen. At 8 o'clock some 80 or 100 guests gathered at Clerke's wharf and embarked on the favorite steamer Arbutus for Frye's Island, a most beautiful spot for picnics some 30 or 40 miles down the river. The morning was slightly foggy, but in an hour the fog rolled away, leaving behind the brightest and sunniest of days. Every thing went as merry as a marriage bell. The ladies played whist or social solitaire to help the time during the sail pass pleasantly, while the gentlemen gathered around, smoking the fine cigars their host so generously provided, discussed the weather, the scenery and the political affairs that Calais is so excited over at the present time. Reaching St. Andrews the Arbutus touched at the wharf and took on board more guests; among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Fay, of Boston, who are visitors at the Algonquin. It was quite two o'clock when the staunch little steamer reached Frye's Island, the desired haven. It was half-past seven o'clock, when the whistle of the Arbutis announced to those at home that the party had re-turned safely. Every guest was loud in praise of their host and hostess and of the charming and generous way they had been entertained, and it was unanimously declared to be the most perfectly arranged and most enjoyable picnic party that ever

Aug. 31 .- The new range on the Fairweather farm was fully tested last week and pronounced a capital one by all who took part in the matches. The fine weather, unfortunately for them, came to an end a little too soon, as it was dull and threatening on Thursday and the rain began just as they were finishing the last match. Then followed the last and most important event, the presentation of the prizes, which were placed on a table outside "the hut," but had to be removed inside, where they were presented to the different winners, by the president, Major Parks, who made a few kind and appropriate remarks to the successful competitors. This presentation, that was in former years a pleasant social function at which many good speeches were made by visitors and members, has now become, seemingly more a matter of business to be got through with as
