SIR WILLIAM RITCHIE.

The highest dignitary of the Anglican church in Canada and the highest judicial officer of Canada have died within a week or two of each other. It is not often that two such leaders in two of the learned professions depart so nearly at one time, nor can it often happen that they are both men whose lives have been so closely identified with New Brunswick and its interests.

Both men were full of years, and had been honored in their lives by their fellow men. Both will be long remembered as prominent figures in the ecclesiastical and legal history of the country. Both dignified and adorned the high offices they filled. It is not every generation that can bring to the front such men as Bishop MEDLEY and Chief Justice RITCHIE.

The late chief justice was a sound law yer. He would have succeeded, without doubt, in many other lines, for he was a thorough man of business, but his choice of the law as a profession was a most fortunate one for him, and for the country. He belonged to the old regime of lawyers who entered the profession and rose by their merits. It has been told that in Mr. RITCHIE's first year of practice he did not earn enough to pay his office expenses, and those, too, were the days when it was unprofessional for a lawyer to advertise himself. When he did begin to climb, however, he went ahead rapidly, and though he got into the legislature by the bare majority of one vote, that was enough to put him on the highway to political success. Chief Justice RITCHIE was not only a sound jurist, but he had the courage of his convictions and dared to do his duty, whoever in authority might be offended. His presence was commanding, and he insisted on every detail that helped to give the dignity belonging to the courts where he sat as judge. Those who remember him in some of the famous trials in this province will readily recall the impressiveness with which he presided on the bench. When it was his duty to sentence a fellow being to death, the dignity and solemnity with which he exercised his high functions could never be forgotten. He, in all ways, lived up to the office he so ably filled. Canada does not lack for sound and upright judges, and there is no doubt the successor of SIR WILLIAM RITCHIE will be a man worthy of the confidence placed in him. Yet, though able men may succeed one another in the highest judicial seat, the memory of the late chief justice will continue to be honored, and his name will live as that of one who was indeed a truly great son of Canada.

Pan-Presbyterian council. The fifth meeting of this body is being held in Toronto, and is of such actual and representative magnitude and importance that something more than a passing reference ought to be bestowed upon it. The history of the movement may be stated in a few words. In July, 1877, the first meeting was held in Edinburgh, having been previously arranged for and organized at a meeting held in the presbyterian college in London in July, 1875. Since then four other meetings have been held, each representing new features of interest and enlarge-

An idea of the nature of the union may be gathered from the first meeting which, although necessarily incomplete and immature as to statistics or representation, was still of an exceedingly impressive and imposing character. Delegates were present representing 49 different presbyterian churches, from 25 different countries. Since that time of course the representation has made advancement towards completeness, although even yet there are churches in full harmony with the principles which are not yet fully reported, so that any complete estimate of the members represented in the council can scarcely be arrived at. The lowest computation is that at least twenty millions of presbyterians are embraced in the alliance, while the membership of the churches concerned has increased a quarter of a million since the last meeting.

Some idea of the new growth may be formed from the fact that in 1888 the two mission agencies in the empire, now the republic of Brazil, for med an incorporate union, taking the name of "The Presbyterian church in Brazil," and that in Japan the agents of all the presbyterian and reformed missions united in forming a strong presbyterian church. This union was consummated in the city of Tokio, December 3, 1890, and one of the first acts of the newly formed synod was to apply for admission to the alliance. Representatives are present in Toronto from Austria, Belgium, Bohemia, from France, Greece, Hungary, from Italy, Moravia, Spain, and Switzerland, from Ceylon, China, India and Persia, from Africa, Australia and the West Indies, and, of out the world known as the Presbyterian mulated as the creeds of the different Alliance, or as it is usually called, especi- churches. Adherence to these and to the ally with regard to its meetings, the presbyterian form of church government forms the basis of union as the condition of membership. It is as follows:

Any church organized on presbyterian priniples which holds the supreme authority of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament in matters of faith and morals, and whose creed is in harmony with the consensus of the reformed confessions, shall be eligible for admission to the alli-

On this basis the alliance stands united, one substantially and essentially, in doctrine and polity.

As to authority, strictly speaking, the alliance has none. It has no power to legislate for any of the churches; the council is for conference rather than enactment. Much is accomplished in the revealing of the practical harmony existing among the churches. Each member seems to inherit the strength of the whole in the consciousness of holding the same faith, the same mission and duty in the world. And in the discussion of the great question by morality and righteousness, by men of conspicious ability from every quarter of the globe, speaking different languages and viewing these problems from different intellectual standpoints, it is evident that the conferences ought to be luminous and suggestive-perhaps more effectively tormative of opinion and practice than direct legislation and positive enactment would be.

While the Americans have been celebrating the Fourth of July ever since they began business on their own account, the anniversary of the founding of the French republic has never been celebrated until this year, when the centennial was observed, on September 22. Hereafter the day will be a national holiday, with all that the name implies in the way of burning powder, drinking wine, and upsetting life generally for twenty-four hours, just as is done on this side of the water.

A novel instance of moving into another man's house is furnished in the case of President ALLEN, of Alfred university, Buffalo, who died the other day. His body has been incinerated and the ashes will be placed in an ancient Greek vase which is said to have once held the ashes of a king who died twelve hundred years before the Christian era. What afterwards become of the royal remains is not stated.

the inspection of PROGRESS. It is largely devoted to ecclesiastical intelligence and personal references to "G. H. L," with reports of his speeches and lectures on various topics. A fair proportion of the clippings consist of reports of church meetings and social events written by Mr. Lee, and leading editorials from the St. John Sun, from the same versatile pen. One of these editorials is on the benefits of the national policy, and another on the landing of the Loyalists. It will thus be seen that Mr. Lee, despite assertions, to the contrary, appears to have in him some of the timber of which journalists are made. If he was able to write leaders for the Sun, he ought to be able to do a great deal more. He seems to have taken a deep interest in the welfare of the city in general, and his keen eye was quick to detect and expose the things prejudicial to the health and safety of the citizens. This is shown in the following scathing letter :

To the Editor of the Sun:-Sir I beg to call the attention of the authorities to the disgraceful and unhealthy condition of Peel street. I observed a dead cat in the centre of the street the other day which was anything but pleasant. Yours,

ONE INTERESTED. In an institute lecture on "Laughter one hundred years ago and now," Mr. Lee remarked that satire "is often beneficently employed for punishing those who have offended against some unwritten law, such as ingratitude. In instances of that class when an offender is held up to public ridicule, either through the press or otherwise, satire is perfectly justifiable." He also terms the press "that grand detector of public imposture." He knows how that is himself now-a-days.

Some of Mr. Lee's reports appear to have been inspired by higher authorities, as appears from his marginal notes, which are written in Scovil short-hand and therefore

CAPT. OLSEN CLAIMS DAMAGES. And Sues Messrs. Lantalum & Co., of this

PROGRESS understands that Capt. Olsen, whose name has been before the St. John public for some two years in connection with a suit of Messrs. Lantalum & Co., has sued that firm for $25,000, which he claims as the amount of damages he has sustained through the suit which they brought against him and which never came to trial marine world since 1864, when he first took charge of a ship. From that time up to two years ago, he was in the employ of many prominent shipping firms, and so far as PROGRESS can learn gave them satisfaction. It seemed to be an unfortunate step for bim when he assumed command of the Eurydice, a vessel owned by Messrs. Lantalum & Co. His last voyage in her was from Quebec to South America. When the vessel reached port there, she met with an accident, in consequence of which she was detained for some months, and when Capt. Olsen returned to St. John, two years ago in August, he was arrested at the instance of Messrs. Lantalum & Co., and charged with not giving a correct account of the freight money. The trial should have come off at once, and the captain found guilty or not guilty as the facts warranted, but instead of that, it was postponed again and again leaving the charge hanging over his head. In these two years Captain Olsen tells PROGRESS that he made sixteen trips to and from New York where he lives, to stand his trial, for only one of which he was allowed $50 expenses. He says that he was not discharged at any time from the vessel. and that owing to this charge he has been out of employment for two years, and that now Messrs. Lantalum have declined to come to trial, he is unable to obtain employment with the charge uninvestigated. It is on these grounds, defamation of character and false imprisonment, PROGRESS understands, that he has brought his suit for damages.

A PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.

A tendency to union among religious bodies is one of the distinctive teatures of the age. This is shown by the number and importance of the unions which have taken place within a score of years, and, perhaps, even more strongly by the manifest desire for further unions, and by the willingness to give prominence to features of resemblance and common interest, and to pass by the causes of disagreement and antagonism. It is notably exemplified in the unions which have taken place in our own country and by the phenomenal growth and great power of bodies of a non-sectarian character, such as Bible society and Sunday-school work, the Young Men's Christian association and other similar organizations which afford striking illustrations of the tendency of religious life to form combinations other than those embraced within the lines of the several denominations. It is true that, at the same time, ruptures and separations have taken place, and that in some instances varied representation can stand must be that the council "represents the greatest and grandest manifestation of christian union the world has ever seen," and that 'it is not a system, as some suppose, that was only adapted to the people of the sixteenth century. * * * It is old, but it is living and mighty-more living and mightly that ever it was before."

It can easily be understood that a member of the body and an officer in close contact with the work and the history of the movement should become enthusiastic over the subject of the alliance, but it must be acknowledged that a calm and fairminded estimate will go far to justify his words as the utterance of a momentous truth. That a magnificent illustration of christian faith is given in the alliance is undeniable; whether it be, as Dr. MATHEWS says, the greatest illustration of christian union the world has ever seen or not, will perhaps depend upon the influence exerted by it for good in the world.

The alliance is composed of churches each of them having a distinct history which has been deeply interwoven with the history of the nations. The alliance is not formed by the reunion of the fragments of a once disunited body. It is rather the flowing together of streams having their origin in distant and widely separated places which have been led by the operation of a commom force to flow together into one channel where their waters intermingle. Presbyterians claim that COLUMBA was laying, in Iona, the foundations of the presbyterianism of Scotland as early as A. D. 563., and organizing a church which thus claims a history of over 1300 years, dating far beyond the era of the Reformation, and that in Ireland, at a still earlier date, the same work was begun by ST. PATRICK. In England the Puritans, and in France the Hugenots, stood under the same banner, while from Germany, Holland and Switzerland are brought the names of Heidelberg, of Dort, and Geneva, with their memories and achievements. From Italy, in some respects most interesting of all, came the representatives, the lineal, spiritual descendants of the Waldenses, the subjects of the bitter persecutions of the House of Savoy, and of the stern appeal of Cromwell; while from Bohemia, Moravia and Hungary came representatives of the churches which gave men whose names have been revered for centuries. It will be easily understood that the ground upon which such an immense and quite easily read by PROGRESS. In one place he writes as "A Churchman" under the head of "Dorchester News," and an account of "Episcopal Mission Work at Moncton" from "our special correspondent" is clipped from the Sun. The shorthand marginal reference shows it to have been "compiled by G. H. L. at request of that he was not given to puffing his own abilities in the notices he wrote, and in that respect he differs from some of his fellow lawyers in this city. Nor are his references to his fellows unkind. Once in a while he grows indignant, as in the instance of the dead cat on Peel street, and a fine specimen of his satire is found when he speaks of the "erratic ferry" between St. John and Carleton. The word "erratic" has now a wider circulation in connection with Mr. Lee himself.

In an alumni oration at the University of New Brunswick, Mr. Lee asserted that "a man with a profession always has something to tall back upon. He is not subject to great fluctuations of income like the merchant; whether he be a clergyman, a doctor or a lawyer, he has that which will always command a certain amount of money.

'The "that" in Mr. Lee's case seems to have been an unlimited amount of gall.

Mr. Lee was an ardent supporter of the conservative cause, and his name appears with that of his late captor, Geo. F. Baird, at a rally in Musquash. It was resolved at that meeting that the choice of C. A. pretty little girl is represented as standing Everett as a candidate was a wise one, though there was a modified opinion by the electors at a later date.

Mr. Lee, as everybody knows, was an book contains many complimentary references to him by the clergy and others. One rector reports to the D. C. S. in these words

I have been assisted as heretofore by my dear friend G. Herbert Lee, Esq., who is dearly loved by the people for his works' sake and is worthy of his the people for his works' sake and is worthy of his ored name, "George Herbert." An interesting letter on "Church Legislation," signed "Episcopalian" and attacking the Metropolitan for countenancing the Mission church, bears the marginal information in short-hand that it was written by a prominent resident of St. John and inserted in the Sun by G. H. L.

which interested Mr. Lee is a long story from the N. Y. Herald, headed "Monumental Swindling," giving the exploits of a law clerk in New York whose name was familiar in this part of the world. The story was one which ought to have had a moral for Lee, on the danger of speculating with other people's money, but the lesson appears to have been wasted. Perhaps Lee got from the story some of the market.

Mr. G. T. Fulford, of Messrs. Fulford & Co., of Brockville, Ontario, proprietors of those well-known and much advertised remedies, Pink Pills and Nasal Balm, was in the city this week. Mr. Fulford is one of the most successful proprietors of patent medicines in North America, and undoubtedly the most successful one in Canada. He is a bold, yet shrewd advertiser, and probably the largest patron of the Canadian newspapers.

Mr. B. T. Van Alen, representing Ladd & Coffin, proprietors of Lundborg's per. fumery, was in the city Tuesday on a business trip. Very many readers of PROGRESS who see the American magazines and other high class periodicals and weeklies, have doubtless noticed the attractive advertisements of this perfumery, and especially of that particular odor, Edenia, in which a before a looking glass hiding a bottle of perfume behind her back and saying guess what I've got." Another large and attractive grocery and provision store will be added to those already in St. John, when Messrs. Worden & Williams open their new building and new store on the corner of Charlotte and Princess streets this morning. During this spring and summer very many people have been interested in the handsome structure that this firm has been erecting on the And conspicuous among the extracts corner of these streets. Besides being a great improvement to that section of the city, the building is especially adapted in its construction for the carrying on of a grocery and provision business. Four very large plate glass windows reveal the whole interior of the well proportioned grocery department, the only section of which not alloted to the display of goods is that occupied by a neat and convenient business office. Two doors lead ideas that he afterwards put into execution | from the corner of this store, one of them in trying to get rich out of the stock connecting with the side entrance by way of Charlotte street and the other leading to the meat and fish store which fronts entirely on Charlotte street.
