May 24 .- The anniversary of the birth of her gracious majesty was characterized as is usual when the weather permits by a great exodus of all those who yearn for open air joys. Many were the disciples of gentle Isaak Walton, and many a speckled beauty left its watery home never to return. One party returned this evening with 40 fine ones. The uck of others I have not heard. In the afternoon about forty drove to Ellershouse, they will have a dance in the house owned by Mr. W.H. Blanchard Everyone nearly seemed to be out of town either driving, or by train, or somehow everyone but the mysterious crowd of useless young men who are always swarming by dozens and by scores in every door way, and wherever there is a lamp post or telegraph pole not to lean against, but to give them an encouraging sort of feeling that they are in society whose mental calibre suits them exactly. The looked for old folks' concert of the choral society came off with much eclat and violet powder last Thursday evening. To Mrs. Nalder must be awarded the laurel wreath, her air was of stateliness and old time dignity that well accorded with her costume which was of royal blue silk, undersleeves and bertha of white lace, her hair high and powdered. There was a young face in the front row on the left hand side of the stage (I mean the left hand to those who where on the stage) which might have been the original of an ivory minature of one of our great grandmothers in their girl hood-deli cate, pure in outline with little tendrils of bair floating down on either side. The costumes were not all of one period which was perhaps a drawback to the general effect, but, certainly, gave variety. Among ye olde gentlemen, Mr. Robson carries off the palm; next came Mr. Will Graham. Mr. Fred Onseley, in a black velvet page's suit, with lace ruffles, looked uncommonly well. Mrs. Tobin, as "The Widdy" in the quintette from the "Sorcerer," looked very quaint, and Mr. Fred Dimock, as the clergyman, simply brought down the house. I must not omit to men-tion Miss Dore's costume, as she was playing the accompaniments off the stage, only those encored till that young lady played it over again. The hall was decorated with various relics of bye gone days, and wonders had been worked upon th stage. The way in which ye ancient ladies scurried and scuttled through the hall and up the steps on their journey from the door to the stage was expressive of more haste than dignity, but in every other respect the concert was a great success and went off without a hitch under Mr. Watts' accomplished leadership.

The Queen's birthday passed off very quietly here.

Generally we have a celebration of some sort, but beyond a boys' cricket match there was nothing through the day. In the evening the long talked of entertainment was given by the pupils of the academy. Unfortunately Miss Nettie Armand whom I might call the prima donna of the evening, had such a might call the prima donna of the evening, had such a bad cold that she could not sing, so her solos had to be omitted. The other young ladies who took part in the flower cantata did remarkably well, and reflect credit on Miss McCollough, who instructed them. The second part of the evening was occupied by a drama entitled "The British Nation at Home." This was an original composition of Mr. McVicar's, and was exceedingly clever and interesting. Brittaria (Miss Louise Harris) was represented as receiving the homage of her colonies. Miss Carrie Hardwick as Canada, and Miss Maggie Miss Carrie Hardwick as Canada, and Miss Maggie McVicar as Indie looked especially pretty. Sundry appearances of Uncle Sam among Britain's loyal subjects caused great amusement to the audience, and the dialogues between him and John Bull were very funny, containing many witty hits about the Ala-bama claims, the fisheries, etc. All the parts were well taken and too much cannot be said in praise of this part of the evening's entertainment. THE SERVANT QUESTION.

Time Has Wrought a Complete Change in the Former Dependants. We cannot expect two irreconcileable things-professional superiority and professional subservience. Where a woman is a fond mother, but an ignorant one, and one who has the belief, not at all uncommon, that maternity per se confers knowledge, and that a mother, because a mother, must know how to manage her own child better than a stranger can, when such a one gets hold of a skilled and experienced nurse, what can we expect? That the skill of the nurse shall be in abeyance because of her relative position as servant, or that she shall oppose, contradict and dis-

the child's good? This would be an offense which most mothers would resent. With this professional skill then we have to make our account, and even where the skill is wanting we must reckon with the professional spirit. With this spirit has also arisen, not unnaturally, the sense of personal independence and in some sort of dignity. The old system has died out. The want of personal feeling on the part of servants for their mistresses and the families they serve is met by the want of the same feeling for them. The whole thing has changed, and as little good as is to be had by crying over spilled milk so little shall we find by lamenting this inevitable conversion. It is part of the spirit of the times, and who can kill that spirit? But we must always remember that the loving nature creates love; that a good mistress has for the most part good servants, and that the woman who is maternal, just, kind and firm will find among her "white caps" more than one girl who will love her and serve her with zeal as well as fidelity, and who will reproduce for her benefit all the best traditions of the past. Influence filters from above to the stratum below. It does not ascend.

How unpopular private domestic service is may be seen by the ease with which hotels and large establishments fill up their vacancies. As a rule the servants in these places are abominably fed and not in the least cared for. If the housekeeper is an undesirable woman-dressy, vain, selfish, or even worse—the servants may fare badly and fall under their burden with no more regard shown them than if they were so many rats and mice. Still, with tainted meat or no meat at all three days out of four, with neglect and the absence of all kindly consideration, girls will FRIENDS OF PROGRESS who know of bright honest boys who would not object to making some money for themselves, or keeping their parents, by two or three hours work every Saturday, in such towns and villages in the Maritime provinces where Progress is not for sale at present, can learn of something to their advantage by writing to vice, but they have the sense of space and freedom and championship, for which they are willing to barter the more solid advantages of a home. Their tenure, too, is slighter, and this easy holding tells as much for them as against them. A week's notice, on either side, severs a connection which has not the faintest shade of personal feeling in it. The girl knows that she can find another such place as this, the housekeeper that she can find another such servant. For the domestic population of these mansions and hotels is eminently floating, peripatetic, nomadic; but they have made the help of private housekeepers more independent, more self reliant, more restless than it used to be .-

VISITING CARDS. The Size and Shape Now in Vogue, as Well as the Proper Inscription. Card etiquette is one of the finest and most delicate tests by which a woman classifies her acquintances. Its laws are unalterable, its sins of omission or commission among the few that are absolutely unpardonable. This bit of snowy paste-board by which judgment is meted out to you by the social tribunal must be fine in texture, pure white in color, a little smaller than those of last year in size, nearly square in shape, and have a smooth but unglazed surface.

The name, engraved in script through the centre of the card, has the address below it in the right-hand corner, the day for receiving in the left corner. This name should never include a husband's title or profession, but should spell out the husband's name in full, and not be written with the initials arene. A daughter, in the first year of her social life, has no card, but engraves her name on her mother's card. After this probationary year the eldest or the only daughter in a family writes only Miss before her family name; the younger daughters write the full name. It has been decided that on a widow's card the dear name so long borne, so hard to relinquish, may be retained with propriety for social use, though in all practical matters the widow writes her own christian name instead of that of her husband.—N. Y. Sun. There is a good deal of valuable information in the above, but there are other facts about card etiquette which you should know - People who get visiting cards, invitations or any kind of society printing done by PROGRESS Job Print have the latest.
