JULY 20 .- On Saturday last the annual outing of the Sackville band, which is always looked forward | tives. to as a source of much pleasure by young and old, was held at Cape Tormentine. It was an excellent day for a picnic, the threatening appearance of the Mass. morning gradually giving way to a clear sky, and just breeze enough to keep one delightfully cool and render boating a pleasure, unmarred by the dreadful ravages of mal de mer. The excursion was a large one, and the various amusements was a large one, and the various amusements afforded ample opportunity for the gratification of individual tastes. Boating and bathing were the favorite pastimes of the young people, while the more sedate spent an afternoon of quiet enjoyment in the lovely grove, listening to the choice selections with which the band favored them. Refreshments of all kinds were served at the canteen. Many remained over Sunday returning early Monday mained over Sunday, returning early Monday morning. The rowdy element, which usually disturbs an affair of this kind, was marked by absent, and all conceded that it was the quietest and most enjoyable day they had ever spent at the Cape. From a financial point of view the excursion was a

I was talking to a lady the other day about our summer amusements, and speaking of the young people, she said: "I think nothing can be more delightful than these little informal affairs, arranged in a few minutes and carried out at once. There is no anticipation to wear off the edge of the pleasure. About the middle of some fine afternoon, you will see a group of girls and boys—I suppose I should say young ladies and gentlemen, but they are girls and boys yet—approaching some friend who is known to possess a plano and a good floor for dancing. In the most soul-compelling manner, and with an utter disregard for conventionalities, they will announce that it is their fixed intention to pay you a visit that evening. One never thinks of denying them, and they come and dance and go home happy. One needs to keep young as iong as possible to have a good
