JULY 27.-If the term "old fashioned" has at all the same meaning when applied to great heat as the one we usually take from it, with regard to cold, then indeed we are having an old fashioned summer, and all the tales told by the oldest inhabitant of the days "away back in the fifties, where it was so hot that folks had to sit in their cellars for coolness," and the fish came up on the brown banks of the river, gasped feebly, and died,—happy fish! they never had to drink Moncton reservoir wa'er, if they had, they would have died without even having time to gasp—all these stories, I say, are at a discount now, and the weather is astonishing the O. I .- far more than he can astonish us, so he feels his occupation temporily gone, and looks on in wonder and silence. The thought of the seaside comes to those of us who are compelled to remain n town, as the desire for sight to the blind, and if we cannot do anything bet er we get out our last year's bathing dress and hungrily snift the salt perfume left in its folds by the briny waves of last summer; it is very refreshing, but somehow it

Mrs. Lyons had been ill for some months with consumption, and sank very rapidly during the past week. "At Home," intended principally, I imagine, for the Germantown men, and perhaps for some of the newly wedded as well. Mrs. Ful-ler's very pretty rooms were filled with almost to repletion with a many colored crowd, in which repletion with a many colored crowd, in which ladies were, of course, in the majority. The crush was indeed at one time tremendous, but it thinned gradually and late comers had very much the best of it. Mrs. Fuller was very handsomely dressed, and had with her Mrs. Edward Kenny, also very well dressed. Light gowns were, of course, in the ascendent; one very pretty one of pale green was both novel and unusual; and the various white trocks looked extremely cool and unfortable on so warm a day; tea was at a dis-unt, but ices and iced coffee divided the attention of most people instead. Mrs. Fuller's is a capital use for this sort of entertainment, as it is larger than the general run of houses. Her tea was in every way a thorough success. [Progress is for sale at Amherst, by George Douglas and H. A. A Group of Photographs of the Rothesay Collegiate School and Its Surroundings.

The recent closing examinations at the

Rothesay Collegiate school and the success of some of its boys in other competitive examinations have attracted more than usual attention to this young institution of learning. This has been accented, as it were, by the energetic manner in which the master of the school, Rev. G. E. Lloydwho is also rector of Rothesay-has taken advantage of the opportunity presented to keep the school in the public eye. That excellent photographer, Climo, has taken a series of thirteen views of the institution, its grounds and its surroundings, which have been seen by thousands of people this week, admirably grouped in the windows of Manchester, Robertson & Allison. It has been indeed a surprise to very many of the people to note the beauty of the grounds and their adaptability for the purposes of a collegiate school. Not only have the buildings and their exteriors been presented to the public, but PROGRESS understands that there is also a magnificent double view of the Kennebacasis river in preparation as well as an interior photo of that much maligned portion of all collegiate institutions, the confectory. The staff of the Rothesay Collegiate school as well as those who are interested in the institution, financially, are the same year Schiaparelli's phenomenal bound that it shall prove a success. It is acuteness of vision detected the so-called not too much to say that they have started "canals," which are, no doubt, misnamed, in the proper manner. They have brough t the arts of photography and illustration to their aid, and the calender which will be issued in a short time will show to the public exactly what the institution has to offer. The facts that there are bright and pleasant grounds, attractive buildings, and spacious and beautiful surroundings are no slight inducements towards persuading the average parents to which institution they shall send their sons. Progress predicts a bright future for the Rothesay Collegiate

Classes will be formed on Tuesday not only in natural science, but in English, literature, elocution, music, psychology, and didactics.

Excursions have been planned to Gagetown, Clifton, Taylor's Island, Lawlor's Lake and other places about St. John. Classes will meet from nine to one daily, and the afternoons will be spent chiefly in excursions and field work, except two afternoons on which visits will be made to the Owens Art gallery and Parks' Cotton factory. The sessions will be held in the Natural History society's rooms and in the Centennial school. The N. B. Natural History society will entertain the visitors at a conversazione to be held in the society's rooms on Friday evening, Aug. 12. The more important excursions will be tree to the members of the school. As this is the first meeting in New Brunswick it is expected a large number will be present.

Where to Get Good Candy.

Messrs. Young and Munro of the 20th Century Kandy store, have another inducement in their window this week which will persuade more lovers of good candy to buy it at their stores. They offer a china tea set for the best guesser. It would almost seem superfluous for this firm to offer any inducements to the public to buy candy, because all those who eat candy already know how good is their manufacture and how reasonable their prices.

THE PLANET MARS.

A Star Which is Attracting Universal Attention This Summer.

A few days ago the passengers on a certain ferry boat plying the Detroit River noticed, about 10 o'clock at night, a fiery

A FLAT OF about seven rooms, or small house with modern conveniences, wanted in central part of the City; rent not more than $200. Address, Tenant, care Progress. July 30, tf red object a short distance above the southeastern horizon. In consequence of the boat somewhat changing its direction the object appeared to pass ahead, and many theories were advanced as to what the strange light could be. Those who were of a scientific turn of mind talked learnedly of comets, meteors, corposants, electricity, magnetism, will-o'-the-wisp, and aurora australis. A small boy suggested fire-balloons. Finally some one thought it might be a star. This idea was received with withering contempt by the savants. Yet the last speaker was correct, for the object under discussion was the planet Mars, which is now so bright that it is hardly recognizable as a star, except by those who are acquainted with astronomy. In the same way, a few years ago, many of the strollers upon the Brooklyn bridge, seeing Venus at nearly maximum brilliancy, actually believed it to be a great electric lamp attached to a baloon and sent up by Mr. Edison in the process of some experimet at Menlo Park, which lay in the same direction as did Venus.

Mars, although always quite bright, is subject to great fluctuations of apparent brilliancy in consequence of its varying distance from the earth. When in conjunction with the sun and hence on the opposite side of the sun from the earth, its average distance from us is 234,400,000 miles, and it is then about as bright as the pole-star. When Mars is at opposition, and therefore on the same side of the sun as the earth, the distance is of course much decreased. But owing to the shapes of the orbits of the two planets and to the fact that they are not concentric, the distance between the planets vories from 61,000,000 to 35,000,000 miles. When the latter distance lies between them the brightness of Mars is over fifty times as great as at conjunction. The planet was at this favorable opposition in 1877, when Asaph Hall, whose son has recently been appointed director of the observatory at Ann Arbor, discovered that Mars is attended by two very small satellites. In inasmuch as their average width is about eighty miles. (No telescope in Detroit is powerful enough to show the satellites or the canals.)

During the present summer Mars comes again to this close position to the earth, the actual opposition occurring on August 4. It is expected that many valuable discoveries will be made, especially in confirmation of Schiaparelli's observations. The great Lick thirty-six-inch refractor and many other large instruments have been constructed since 1877, and these, together with the older telescopes, will be turned nightly upon this very interesting planet. As Mars is now farther south than usual, the southern observatories will be best situated for watching it and Harvard's new station at Arequipa, Peru, will probably do some excellent work in this direction.

With a horizon of average clearness, the planet may be seen half or three quarters of an hour after rising. During the latter part of July and the earlier part of August its time of rising will be between 8 and 9 p. m., being a little earlier each month. The planet cannot be mistaken, as it is the brightest star visible in the heavens .-Detroit Free Press.
