ADMIRAL HOPKINS AND THE BLAKE.

The First Visit of the Finest Warship in the North Atlantic Squadron to this Port.

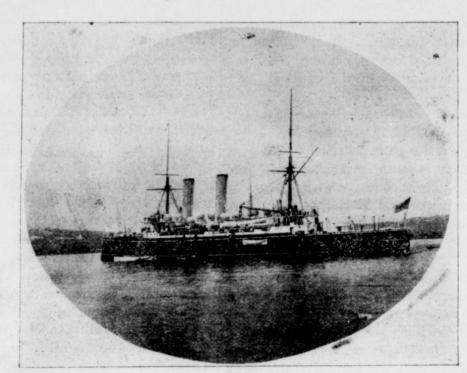

Weather permitting the flagship of the Nort's Atlantic squadron, the Blake, with Admiral Sir John Hopkins on board will appear in the harbor to-day for a first visit to the city of St. John. In connection with this interesting event Progress reprints a good portrait engraving of the admiral that was obtained upon his arrival at Halifax last year. An engraving of the splendid warship, the Blake, is also presented which being produced from an instantaneous photograph taken at an unfavorable day, is not so Otty, Mabel Jordan and Ella Barnes; Messrs. Steve clearly defined as might be expected.

The Blake was the best of the English warships that represented the navy in the recent naval review in New York, and the praise showered upon the vessel and the courteous and genial admiral, Sir John Hopkins, filled columns of the American press. In this connection nothing was so marked as the tribute paid to the gallant Englishman by that thoroughly anti-British newspaper, the New York Sun.

The Blake will remain a few days in the harbor, and thousands of people will, no doubt, avail themselves of the opportunity to visit the ship.

WHAT TO EAT IN SUMMER.

It is a Common Mistake to Reduce the Diet to a Very Low Point.

One of the commonest mistakes of housekeepers is to reduce the bill of fare in summer to such moderate dimensions that it fails to fill the demand of the system for good and wholesome nourishment. It is true that the appetite flags at this season, and that the average individual teels very little desire for elaborate food. At the same time the system is apt to be weak from the oppressive effects of the weather, and there is need for a stimulating tonic diet to keep up the strength.

The summer diet should not be reduced in quanity, but changed in quality. Heavy dishes containing animal fat and spices, like plum puddings, rich meats like pork, or even roasts of beef or mutton, are not in keeping with sultry weather. On the other hand, light soups, broiled meats, green salads, and the fresh vegetables and fruits of the summer season offer a delighttul array of suitable food. Delicate Orloff, the general in command of the friscassees, meats fried in batter, cro- Third Division, might have found a fitting quettes, and dainty rechauffes of various kinds are all acceptable on a summer's day, the popular idea that spiced or highly sea-soned dishes belong exclusively to winter days is contradicted by the popularity of curries and other spiced dishes in tropical climates. The truth of this matter is that peppery-spiced dishes are not heating to the blood, as popularly supposed, but stimulating to the stomach; and in the summer the digestion needs just such a stimulant, always provided it is used in reason and in moderation.

Auother mistake is to serve cold meats and iced soups on the summer dinner-table. Such dishes are much more difficult to digest than when they are well heated. The reason for the use of catsups and mustards. on cold meats is founded on rules of sound hygiene. The mustard and catsup assist the system in the comparatively difficult work of digesting the cold meat. It the meat is warmed up and served in some manner, with some piquant rellish, it is much more wholesome in summer | in particular, always torgets that each of as well as in winter. Rich, nourishing soups, without the suspicion of grease in the composition, should appear regularly on the dinner-table in summer as in winter. Such soups are valuable because of their word spoken by the Czar spreads like wildstimulating powers, and enable the system | fire through the town."

food though the requirements of individuals differ. While some people exist in the most perfect health on a vegetarian diet, others suffer from it; and still others require a highly stimulating diet of meat. This depends somewhat on the climate, but more upon the individual habits of life and the amount of exercise one takes in

THE REAL CULPRIT.

How the Official Secrets of the Russian Army Looked Out.

The Emperor Nicholas very often took the management of affairs into his own hands without consulting the Ministers, acting in all respects the part of a genuine autocrat, though, alas! unable to control himself, his war-like propensities getting the better of him. One day he mobilized the army on the Turkish frontier without taking Nesselrode into his confidence. Nevertheless, the news became the town's talk, at which His Majesty was highly indignant. The scene which afterward transpired between him and his favorite, Prince place in a comedy.

"Why have I got a police force?" the monarch passionately exclaimed.

"Your Majesty ought to know best."
Quite right, only I fail to see what good it is. And if within twenty-four hours you cannot name the trator who has divulged the secret of the mobilization of the fourth and fifth army corps, you shall be cashiered." With great composure the Prince replied : "My police is so well organized that it need not take me twenty-four hours to name the traitor." "Then you know him-you have discov-

'I know quite sufficient, sire, but I cannot reveal it except at the express comm and of the Emperor.'

"I command you to do so on the spot." "The traitor whom your Majesty inquires after is named Nicholas I., Paulo vitch, Czar of All the Russias, who, when conversing in the Empress's drawing room about affairs of State and military matters to resist the ravages of the fevers and other diseases that are so often prevalent in summer.

Of course, the well-informed Chief of the Police retained his post; yet the Emperor continued his practice of thinking aloud at There is no tonic equal to wholesome the evening parties given by the Empress.
