minister, who won all by her gentle courtesy, and for the first time the ministers of agriculture and the interior. Mrs. Boyd made every one indeed at home by her characteristic ease and quiet grace specially assisted by her nieces, Mrs. J. Bright Cudlip, and Miss Gussie Cruikshank, and the Misses Emma and Alice Tuck, Misses Nellie Cushing, Gertie Schofield, Bessie Robertson, Lollie Harrison, Keator and Scammell, and also Mrs. Seely, Mrs. Binning, Miss Cruikshank. The halls and rooms were decorated with plants and flowers, the dining room draped in green and pink, interwoven with flowers, by Mrs. Cudlip, whose exquisite taste won universal praise. All over the house, from street to topmost story. the guests wandered at pleasure, the strangers enjoying the extensive marine view from the upper, while in the drawing-room Mrs. Boyd and Senator Boyd received their guests. After this, from seven till midnight, a large party of young ladies and gentlemen joined in a dance; the supper from a table bounteously provided, was all that could be desired.

Among the guests were: His Honor the Lt. Governor and Lady Tilley, Judge and Mrs. Tuck, Judge and Mrs. Palmer, Judge and Mrs. King, His Worship the Mayor and Mrs. Peters, Count and Countess de Bury, Senator and Mrs. Dever, Mr. and Mrs. G. To curb Women's tongues when they bee idle." This is the inscription on an iron hooping, with a flat piece projecting inward to lie upon the tongue, still preserved in the ancient church of Walton-upon-Thames, in Surrey. Tradition says that this bridle was presented to the parish about two centuries ago by a person of consequence, whose name was Chester. Its presentation arose from the singular circumstance of his having lost a valuable estate through the idle stories of a neighbour. In the days when this curious instrument was in use it was sometimes called a "brank," and was put upon the head of the offender and padlocked behind; the wearer was then led through the town,
