PROGRESS, SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1894.

HIS PRIVATE MARK.

When I was quite a young man I counted among my close friends a private detective. The two of us were enjoying a quiet smoke and chat in his cozy little office one day when the door opened and his boy ushered in a lady client. She was apparently under 20, and was quite fashionably attired. Her torm was tall and slender and her face exceedingly attractive, but bore traces of some sudden and overwhelming affliction, for her eyes were red from weeping.

"Mr. Banks, the detective, I presume?" she queried, turning, after a quick glance at me to my more mature companion. "At your service, madame. Pray be seated.

"I am in sore trouble, sir," she said, in tremulous tones, applying her handkerchief to her eyes. Death has suddenly robbed me of a father and the prison, it nothing worse, threatens to take a dear cousin from me.

"That is very sad," my friend said, sympathetically. But compose yourself, my dear young lady; we may yet avert the latter half of your trouble.'

"Oh, sir! God grant that you may, for my cousin, whom they suspect of the murder of my poor father, was to be my husband," she said, the seriousness of the case quite overcoming her natural modesty. "But he is innocent, I know it, I feel it, in spite of the evidence against him. Oh, believe me sir, Harry is as innocent of this dreadful deed as I am !

"My dear young lady," said Banks, encouragingly, "before hearing the first detail of your case I am convinced that he is. My belief in feminine intuitions is based upon the solid toundation of experience. Be calm, therefore, and let me have the story from the beginning.'

The circumstances she related were as tollows: Her father, Thomas Kempton, was the proprietor of a large furniture factory. He was a man who paid strict attention to business, and was in the babit of remaining in his office after the factory had closed for the night and the men had departed, in order to finish up his large correspondence.

One of the clerks in his employ was a nephew, a fine young fellow, strong of body and generous of heart, but not free from the follies of youth. Harry Stanton was a graduate of college and a thorough athlete, and, being not scarce 20, he had not outgrown his youthful enthusiasm for sports, clubs and semi-incidentally late suppers with the boys.

Now the old are not always so tolerant of the ways of the young as recollection ance to lead to an immediate and favorable report to your charming; client." said I. rich, is right in my line."

Banks laughed good humoredly and then relapsed into ruminating silence. It was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon when we again entered the factory office, of any sort, and as tar as I knew might be any one of the thousand things between a tin of biscuits and an infernal machine. Neither Gregg nor his quarry had yet been heard from.

"You will oblige me by gathering all the employees of the factory together in this office, Mr. Williams," said Banks addressing the head clerk. "Let the outer doors be locked and when the men are all known. in here see that the office door is securely fastened also. I wish to try an interesting little experiment."

"I observe that you use a typewriter," ne went on after Mr. Williams had given orders to have the men called. "Will you kindly remove the ribbon, or if you have an unused one better still.'

This being brought Banks proceeded to untie his package. Removing the outer wrapper he laid bare a plain cardboard box, the cover of which he was on the point of lifting when he looked up to see the eyes of all present gazing upon it with eager curiosity. Mine, he atterward told me, were fairly popping out of my head. As there was no particular hurry the little devil which tempts us to tantalize entered into him, he stayed his hand and with a most quizzical expression of countenance he lounged back in his chair and coolly puffed at his cigarette.

In five minutes the men, looking somewhat mystified, were all assembled, and everything was ready for the next step, with a quick glance Banks ran his eye over the forty faces before him. Then turning to me he whispered mysteriously : "Stand close beside me and when it comes to names jot down those I give you the signal to. It will save time.

"Now, men," he said, "addressing the gathering, "as little more can be done in the matter of the murder until we hear from Detective Gregg, Mr. Williams here has kindly consented to allow me this favorable opportunity to put to the test a little theory which has recently been brought to my notice. It is said that in China all holders of public offices and especially fact that they cost $3. See? soldiers are known by their finger marks. The arrangement of the grooves or furrows on the skin, it is claimed, is alike in no two individuals. That I wish to prove or disprove conclusively. As each man's name is called he will please step forward, press his left thumb upon the typewriter ribbon and then make an impression on this strip of prepared glass. To distinguish Sherlock Holmes. one from another I desire each man to record his name on the label I have affixed under the space for each impression." Banks eyed each man keenly as he came up in answer to his name and did as requested. One, two, three, all innocent looking fellows enough went by, but the tourth individual had a sullen sort of look, and receiving the nudge of which I had been forewarned, I jotted down his name. So the registering procession moved along until at last all had left their thumb marks and I had listed just about a dozen names. "Now," said Banks, litting the mysterious package, "I have here a small magic lantern through which I propose to put the slide bearing the impressions. It is now dark enough I fancy and --yes-the back of that large calendar yonder will serve excellently as a white surface. Oblige me, Mr. Williams by turning its face to the wall. Thank you." While speaking my friend had busied himself preparing the lantern so that matters moved absorbingly on without delay. "To make the test a little more interesting," he continued, "I will first show you the thumb mark of a gentleman whom I have a great desire to meet. We will com-

"I was hoping it was of suffisient import- he saw how it might be used to his advantage. On his way through the general office he looked through Stanton's desk Comforting the distressed, when aforesaid and secured his knife. Returning after distressed are feminine, young, pretty and the deed to complete the evidence against the young fellow, he had left the incriminating thumb-mark.

As for Stanton his story was very simple. He had returned to the premises las: evening with a view to apologizing to his Banks carrying a package about fitteen uncle, but pride overcame his good ininches square. It was wrapped in plain tention, he had gone away again without brown paper, bore no label, tag or address entering. Shortly atterward meeting a friend, who lived some twenty miles from town, he had been tempted with the prospect of a day's shooting to accompany him home. Three o'clock that afternoon, and just after they had got back from the woods, the first information of what had occurred reached him, and borrowing his friend's mare he started post haste for the factory, with what result has already been made should make them, and so it happened that the frequent transgressions of the uncle's office rules by the nephew caused between the two a considerable friction. On the evening of the tragedy there had been quite a serious quarrel, and the young fellow had left the presence of his employer in hotheaded baste and with angry words.

One hour later and half an hour after the factory had closed Mr. Kempton was found murdered in his private office. He was seated in his chair, his head falling torward on the desk before him. A pocket knife had been used to accomplish the dastardly deed, and this lay on the floor in a pool of blood at the murdered man's feet. On being cleansed and examined the fatal weapon was instantly recognized by the clerks as young Stanton's.

There was no indication of a struggle, the blow had evidently been struck from behind, and with unerring aim had pierced the heart. The safe had been rifled of its valuable contents, and there was evidence *hat the assassin in making his exit through the general office had stopped to open Stanton's desk, and to remove such things as the young fellow in making a permanent departure would be likely to take.

So much in substance had by interrogatory promptings been drawn from the girl, when Banks said

"And now tell me what steps have been taken."

"Poor papa's head clerk has employed a detective-a Mr. Gregg-who after looking into the case, started off in hot pursnit ot my cousin, whom he firmly believes to be the assassin.

"Um !" came from Banks, as he gazed musingly into the fire. Then young Stanton has disappeared.

"Yes, 'tis all a strange combination of circumstances, but I trust, sir, you still believe him innocent,"

"My dear young lady, a professional opinion based on the merits of the case would be rather premature. For the present you mu t draw what comfort you may from my faith in your intuitions. If you desire it I shall proceed at once to the factory in order to secure some further data."

"Kindly do so in my behalf, Mr. Banks," responded the girl, and then exhibiting to the tull her perfect confidence in her hunted lover, she said, "I wish you to spare no expense in bringing the criminal to justice." Receiving my friends promise to call at her home and report if any important clew blur. So perfect was the matching of the was discovered, she stepped into her carriage and was driven away.

At his request I accompanied him to the scene of the tragedy. An hour's investion bore rather barren results. The only important fact brought out beyond what we already knew, was that the suspected young man had been seen near the factory shortly before the discovery of the murder. Banks, I thought, began to look a little bit blue.

"Has this desk of Stanton's been touched ?" he inquired presently. pulling out the upper drawer.

'The contents have not been materially disturbed," responded the head clerk. "Detective Gregg simply noted the missing articles, and the bloody-finger marks on the paper where it had been lifted to get at derer! Stop him !" some old letters Stanton used to leave lying around the bottom. The whole mat- and a horse and rider dashed past them, ter seemed so clear to him that he was here scarcely ten minutes before he started off pare the others with this one." On the disk of light thrown upon the wall appeared a peculiar arrangement of lines, jagged, running into each other, beginning nowhere and ending in the same place.

Presently with my list before him Banks pushed the long slide in and stopped at No. 4. For a few seconds he allowed it to show out beside the first. It exhibited a conformation entirely different. He then superimposed them or placed the figure on the moving slide directly over that on the stationary one. The result was a most confused network of interwoven lines.

Quickly he hurried through my list, treating each in the same manner and allowing the dissimilarities to speak for themselves. Presently one of the thumbmarks fitted so nicely over the stationary one that not a single variation could be observed. There was no crossing of the lines and no impression that Fturned my eyes toward the lantern to be sure that the two slides were really there. As I did so I noticed a commotion in the back part of the room. Then came a yell from Banks. "Seize him-John Trasker-the mur-

ter seemed so clear to him that he was here scarcely ten minutes before he started off in hot pursuit." "Um !" said Banks in his peculiar way, and then he proceeded to go through the drawer. Being slightly acquainted with one of the clerks, I stepped up to him for a moment's conversation. When I re- turned to my friend's side he was pocketing a sheet of paper which he had been exam- ining with his microscope. A quick glance at his face showed me he had hit upon a promising clew. "I think we have seen sufficient," he said immediately, and in a few minutes we were on our way back to town. "Found something, Banks?" "A mere trifle," the responded, "but mum's the word, my boy, even for you. A	With a leap the rider cleared his saddle; with a single bound he went over the wall and almost before the other pursuers real- ized what was happening, John Trasker was struggling to free his pinioned arms from the iron grasp of his muscular captor. "Why, if it isn't Stanton!" cried Mr. Williams in surprise, as he and the others came up. "Good!" exclaimed Banks, with a grin; "this is a little bit of poetic justice I hadn't arranged for." Arriving at the factory, Trasker broke down and made a most abject confession. He had planned to remain behind that	<ul> <li>Morrison to Alex. McIntyre.</li> <li>Sackville, April 3, by Rev. W.
