LADIES COLLEGE NOTES.

SACKVILLE, April 25. - The annual public meeting of the Eclectic society took place on Friday evening. These entertainments are deservedly popular and always command a full house. the closest attention. This was followed by an ex-Hamlet was above the average and showed a most lecided histrionic ability.

The tableau of the "Country Cousins" was very | bridegroom and the bride. amusing and effective. The recitation by Miss hearty encore gave a lullaby.

Probably the affirmative, for I am sure almost any one would lose his head if brought before this fair and feminine tribunal The tableau "The flower of the family," showed that it was of so fair a quality that it required no yeast to make it rise up out of the barrel.

The Webb string quartette gave one of their always acceptable selections and after a short pause the chief feature of the evening took place. Seventeen young ladies in Japanese costume, with little fans in their hair, went through a fan drill. It was admirable in every respect and one residence last evening.

Mr. Jasper Winslow will entertain his friends at

of the prettiest things I have seen for a long time.

The graceful movements showed very plainly the excellence of the physical culture training, and a great deal of credit is due to some one for the get ip of the costumes. This Eclectic society is one of long standing at he college, and every year it is growing in num-pers and strength. It is for mutual improvement, literary in tone, and has a fair-sized, well-selected Private meetings are held frequently, at which ubjects of the day are fully discussed and eacl member is given every encouragement to think fo erself and to express her ideas. An evening with the immortals was spent at Mr Perry's piano recital on Tuesday, The audience istened in enraptured silence for nearly two hours to the glowing oratory and exquisitely sympathtic playing of this artist, . their silence only broken by quent bursts of appreciative applause. Mr. Perry said the idea of describing each piece, explaining ts motive and giving sometimes the circumstances inder which it was written, was original with him Mr. H. Atkinson returned on Saturday last from self. He surmised that vocal music was the mos popular because the words put one in touch with he sentiment and that a verbal synopsis of an in strumental piece would best place the large mass of listeners in support with the player. His first selection by Buthwin was most beautiful and was scriptive of a winter's night with flashing northern lights. This was followed by a gavotte in which you could distinctly hear the clang of the armor i which this old Spanish dance was originally always performed. In giving a selection from Schermann Mr. Perry called him the Shelly of music and said to his mind there was a great analogy between the poets and musicians of a period. He cited several, Bach and Milton, Chopin and Tennyson are those I best remember. Then we were favored with two of Oue, the Louley, was beautiful beyond compar-You heard the rippling of the water over the rocks growing louder as the hapless boatman apcoached the river, whose sweet song ran like a silver thread through and above the sound of the lapping waves. > I wish I had the pen to properly describe his magnificent playing. His runs and trills were like showers of pearls, like cobwebs glistening with dew or like moonlight on the snow. The dark[and rain out of doors were quite forgotten, our bodily presence seemed to have slipped away from us and we were floating on waves of sound, our souls wrapped round and round and fairly drenched with he heavenly harmonies. At the close of one piece by Chopin, I think, he struck one exquisite chore that was most thrilling. It made me think of that lost chord that the poet could only hope to hear again on the other side of the gate of Paradise.

> The recital closed with two selections from Liszt, one of which Mr. Perry said he had often heard played by the great master himself. Mr. Perry's technique is grand and his interpre tation most sympathetic. Perhaps it is because his eyes are veiled to things of earth that he has such marvellous insight in the realm of music and be cause he is one "with whom the melodies abile, of the everlasting chime."

The bride's bouquet was made entirely of lilies of the valley, which has been so much worn lately at weddings The bridesmaids carried pink roses, the two little maidens excepted, who carried baskets of white roses. The bridegroom's gifts to the bridesmaids were pearl and gold pins. The church looked very pretty having been decorated with flowers and palms, and the wedding party was an effective one as both the bridegroom and his best man were in uniform. As the newly married couple left the church they passed under the now customary arch of steel, formed by the rossed swords of the brother officers of the groom. After the ceremony a reception was held at the use of the bride's father. There was not an exceptionally large number of guests, only seventy five invitations outside of the very near relatives and the brother officers of the groom having beer sent out. The relatives of the groom were very largely absent owing to the two deaths which have taken place in the family connection.
