THE SERMON THIS WEEK Is Preached by Rev. Robert S. McArthur,

My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death.
-Matt. xxvi., 36. To assume even for a time the character of a felon is to a holy soul painful in the extreme. Actors of high reputation find it opposed to their taste to represent a character famous only for vileness. Christ's shrinking was natural and proper. It is a mark of honor and glory befitting the Godman. I give due weight to all these considerations. But I affirm that they do not themselves account for his deep and awful sorrow. He must have known-he foretold it many times—that he was to rise from the dead on the third day. The grave could not hold him. His physical sufferings at the worst would be short. The victory was near. It was to be a brief darkness followed by a never-ending brightness. Who can believe this was more than an element-and, compared with other elements, an important one-in his sorrow? Martyrs in Christ's name and for His sake have gone joyfully to the stake. They have shouted amid fagots and flames. The pages of history contain the names of many such. Much more has willingness to suffer for Christ been seen. What glorious names come to us as we speak! There are thou sands who are suffering a daily martyrdom for His sake. There are women tied to drunken and godless husbands and sweetly iiving for Christ, dying a thousand deaths, while they live a single life. Upheld by the blessed hopes of the Gospel, they never utter a murmur. At this hour

there are, believe it, friends, thousands who would gladly lay down their lives for ory? A thousand times no! There was that; there was far more than that.

Another consideration is that Satan was permitted at this time to tempt Christ with peculiar power. Satan tempted Jesus in the wilderness and was repulsed. He left him "for a season." He now returned. It was the last-the death struggle. It was the world's crisis. The old conflict is to be settled forever. "It is the hour and the power of darkness. In one garden truth was crushed and error triumphed. The first Adam was overthrown: shall the second be overthrown? If so, the knell of humanity must be rung. On the result of this conflict in this garden depends the possibility of entering paradise. It Satan triumph now God is no more God. Hell appreciates the struggle. Its artillery is hurled against the bowed sufferer. What pressions heard in the family. But what an hour! What a conflict! Here let our monuments have been built up by poor hearts break in sympathy with our brokenhearted Lord. Oh, be not indifferent when for you Christ is meeting the temptations of Satan! Christ is warding off eternal death and hell. Behold, behold Him in His great agony! Never was there sorrow

But the true explanation of the mysterious sorrow in the garden and the awful agony on the cross—as seen in the cries of God offered in both places—is that Christ, the Godman, the divine substitute, was bearing in some way the iniqities of a lost world. This is a holy of holies. It seems almost irreverent to judge with a critic's learn the synonyms of a word or search coolness these awful experiences. But out its derivation. such is the teaching of Scripture, alike in the Old and New Testaments. "He was bruised for our iniquities." "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." "It pleased the Lord to bruise him." Oh, no, the cup could not pass from him! He drained it to the dregs. "He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin." He was "made a curse for us." "Who His own self bare our sins in His own body on the tree." He consented to have our sins laid upon Him. He is treated as the transgressor. Oh matchless love! Oh transcendent and sovereign grace! Blessed doctrine of divine substitution! God has found a way to save the lost. Heaven is opened to the vilest. With Paul we can say, "Oh, the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!" There is a practical applications of these truths. First, we see the exceeding sinfor a sinner, on his own behalf, to attempt to stand before God! Christ sank for a time under the weight of sins not his own How shall we meet God with sins upon us which are own? Second, we see here as no where else, the love of God in Christ. Marvellous love! No mind can conceive, no heart can feel, no tongue but there is its grandest display, "God so | sons. loved the world." Third, the duty of Burns wrote many of his most beautiful in God's name I admonish you today, sublime poetry whenever he could snatch a come and give yourselves to this great few minutes from a busy life. CONVICT JIM.

How a Dear Little Girl Managed to Soften

In a prison there now is a man whom we will call Jim. He is in on a life sentence. Up to last spring he was regarded as a desperate character, ready for mischief and rebellion at any hour. He planned, not long ago, a general outbreak, and was "given away" by one of the conspirators. He next plotted a general rebellion, but was again b etrayed. He then kept his own counsel; and, while never refusing to obey orders, he obeyed them like a man who only needed backing to make him refuse to. One day in June a party of strangers came to the institution. One was an old gentleman, the others ladies, and two of the ladies had small children. The guide took one of the children on his arm, and the other walked until the party began climbing stairs. Jim was working near by, sulky and morose as ever, when the guide

"Jim, won't you help this this little gir

The convict hesitated, a scowl on his face: and the little girl held out her hand and

"If you will I guess I'll kiss you."
His scowl vanished in an instant, and he lifted the child as tenderly as a father. Half-way up the stairs she said:

"Now you've got to kiss me, too." He blushed like a woman, looked into the Master, rather than deny him. Think you, then, that simple fear of physical her innocent tace and then kissed her cheek, death could have so burdened and crushand before he reacehd the foot of the stairs ed the Son of God—the Lord of life and again that wicked man had tears in his eyes Ever since that day he has been a different man, and no one in the place gives less rouble. Maybe in his far away western home he has a little child of his own. Or it may be that kiss of the little girl called back to him the scenes of his own happy home and innocent childhood. No one knows, for he never reveals his inner life. But does not the change in this man's life furnish evidence that those remarkable and sudden changes which church people call conversion may be the means of leading people from darkness to light, and, indeed, of doing an untold amount of good?

ODD MOMENTS.

They Have Helped in the Success of Many Men and Women.

"Oh, it's only five minutes or ten minutes till mealtime; there is no time to do anything now," is one of the commonest exboys with no chance out of broken fragments of time which many of us throw away. The very hours you have wasted, if improved, might have insured your success.

"While the students of Andover were waiting for breakfast at the boardinghouse," said a lady, "the rest of the young men would stand chaffing each other; but Joseph Cook, if there were only a half minute to spare, would turn to the big dictionary in the corner of the room and Though she has done so much, yet all her life has been subject to interruptions which would have discouraged most women from attempting anything outside their regular family duties. She has glorified the commonplace as few other women have done, Harriet Beetruths. First, we see the exceeding sin-fulness of sin. A ! Federation of Churches.

A movement is on toot to forn a federtion of all the churches in New York for the purpose of work in the lower part of the city. A large committee of clergymen has been appointed, representing the different evangelical denominations, to draft a plan with perfected details, and to enlist if possible the co-operation of all the churches. The Rev. E. B. Coe, D. D., who represented the Reformed church on he committee, in speaking of the scheme says: "If this idea is carried out it will be the first union of churches or religious work ever attempted in this country. We wish to effect a federation for work throughout the city below Fourteenth street and along the city's eastern and western borders above Fourteenth street. This work is not the establishment of churches, but rather to better the condition of the poor through discriminating charity; to lift up the depraved by bringing them into social clubs, which will be formed for men and boys, and to let a little sunshine into the outcast's life. There are two objects to be accomplished. One is to prove the falsity of the statements sometimes made that the church in New York, irrespective of denominations, is only for the rich. The other is to give those persons of large wealth who are charitably inclined, but who have not denominational affiliations, an opportunity to do great good to a great number. Bishop Potter has already spoken in favor of the plan for the episcopal church, and it is hoped that he will be followed by the leaders of all

THE MEDIUM WAS ILL. The Apparent Reason for her Illness is

An American lady recently related an amusing experience of hers that happened shortly before she left the States for England. She said that the incident took place at a town in Arizonas called Boulder, and that they had not many amusements or excitements in those days, excepting shooting matches, which the town people soon became accustomed to.

So, when a Mrs. Somebody, who stated that she came from London, strewed the town with hand-bills stating that she would shortly give a spiritual seance in a hotel drawing-room, everybody was excited about it.

"I was a very good pianist," said the lady, "so when the medium offered me novels and newspaper articles, when her evening I jumped for joy, though I was children were in bed and whenever she rather nervous about the spirits. My parents gave their consent, and tickets sold rapidly.

"On the day of the seance I met a young Englishman who had emigrated from the old country and settled in Arizona, where he gained a reputation as a dead shot. I asked him if he was going that night.
"'Haven't heard anything about it,' he said. Then I explained it to him.

"Those things are trauds,' he exclaimed. 'I've seen any number of them in England. I'll go, and the first spirit that shows up I'll shoot at it. If it's only a spirit it can't be injured and it it isn't, why, serve stolen from one of the legs, whereupon the 'em right.' And away he went whistling

One of the very first attempts at making an iron stove was by Count or Cardinal Polignas of France early in the 18th century The results of his efforts were simply iron fireplaces, constructed with hollow backs. hearths and iron jambs; the only improve-ment it showed over the old fireplace was in a slight saving of heat. In the year 1716. Dr. Desaugliers of London improved the Polignac fireplaces to such an extent that they could be used for burning coal as well as wood. Dr. Franklin's stove, invented in the year 1745, was a great improvement on everything in the stove line that had proceeded it. The principles upon which it was constructed were similiar to the airtight stoves int oduced many years later. Indeed, it is believed that had it been possible at that time for founders to make tight-fitting castings the Franklin experi-ment would have been straight. About the year 1775 (there is some dispute about the exact date) Dr. Franklin improved his stove so as to make it suitable to the consumption of common bituminous coal. In 1782 Benjamin Thompson (Count Rumford) made several improvements on Frank-lin's designs. In 1833 J. L. Mott made the first stove that would burn anthracite coal. Since the last-named date hundreds of inventors have taken part in bringing the stove up to its present perfection.
