

WOMAN and HER WORK.

Girls will grow up! It is a way they have, and somehow they always seem to do it so unexpectedly that the performance never fails to cause great surprise in the performer's own domestic circle. Only the other day a dimpled baby, yesterday a there is usually a goodly array of debutantes at the Easter dances.

There are various ways of coming out, the most common of which is for the youthful aspirant to society honors to long-legged, awkward schoolgirl, all feet and hands and angles, today a young lady; and how and when the change took place it is impossible to say. One thing is very certain:

CHILDREN'S SPRING COATS.

The child is a woman, the book may close over it for all the lessons are done.

The little maid has graduated, and now the next important event in her life, and the one to which, I am afraid, she has given the most thought, is her "coming out," her formal entrance into that social world, which seems such a veritable fairy-land to her now when she stands hesitating on the confines, but which in after years she may find more like the great desert of Sahara, and grow so unutterably weary of.

Small wonder [that] the ceremony of coming out assumes such importance in the eyes of the eager little debutante; it is really a very great matter to her, this leaving the safe harbor of childhood and seclusion to set sail on the broad ocean of life, and it behooves both the damsel her-make her first formal appearance in the social world at the first dance which happens to be given amongst her immediate circle of friends. This is of course much the easier way, giving the least possible trouble to the debutante, but if Miss Blossom's mother is a wise woman, she knows that it is much more desirable to have her little craft launched from the home harbor, and if she can possibly manage it she will give her a coming out tea. It is no such bugbear after all; nothing like a dance, or even a formal reception, just cards to all one's old friends, the furniture cleared out of the way, more ferns and palms and flowers than usual scattered about the drawing room, plenty of tea, coffee, chocolate, or bouillon, sandwiches, or salads, cakes, and ice cream, spread out in the dining room, and three or four of Blossom's old friends in their very most fetching gowns, to help receive. Last, but by no means least the heroine of the occasion, standing

It must be obvious to everyone who gives the subject any thought, that such a presentation to society lends a girl far more dignity and importance in the eyes of even her own set, than if she had slipped in by the back door, as it were, entered unannounced, and it also makes more friends for her. Her own family have considered it worth while to introduce her, and her friends think more of her accordingly. Mothers with daughters of their own to present cannot ignore her, when they are entertaining, as they might have done had she come out at some one else's house, or at a large public hall. Old friends of her mothers who do not attend dances and balls and who might otherwise never have met her in society, are pleased at being re-remembered, and considered of sufficient importance to have their friend's daughter formally presented to them at her own home, and they cannot refuse to do her honor by attending her small function.

But even here, the mother's duties do not end by any means, in fact what mother's duties are ever at an end? It is still in her hands to see that the voyage of life is made as smooth as possible, and the shoals avoided as far as may be, if she takes care to make her girl's home pleasant to all that girl's desirable friends, if she invites the nicest girls, and the nicest young men of her set, to the house as often as she can, not only to parties and teas, but to come in and out in a friendly manner, taking an interest in their pursuits, and plans, and making them feel thoroughly at home, it is not likely she ever will have to complain, as many mothers do, of her daughter making undesirable friends. This does not necessarily involve the spending of a good deal of money. Hospitality of the very best kind is within the reach of people whose means are of the most moderate; but it does cost care and thought and some trouble too. No training could possibly be better for our debutante, however, since a wise mother will teach her all she knows about entertaining at the least possible expense. Show her how to compound the dainty dishes which taste so delicious, and cost so little when made at home, and in short teach her at the same time, the art of being a hostess herself, with all the charming unselfishness and grace of manner the true hostess possesses.

One of the most important lessons such a mother teaches her girl, is the duty, and the grace of universal and unfailing courtesy. Alack, and alas! I fear such mothers must be rare, so rare is this especial charm with the young girl of the present day, who I am sorry to say seems to think only of herself, and to forget that there is anyone else in the world. The girl who does not forget to inquire for those of her acquaintances who are ill, who sometimes takes the trouble to call and find out how they are, and bring them a shape of jelly, or a bunch of flowers, who does not "hate babies," and who finds time for a pleasant chat with old people occasionally, is pretty certain of being a social success, and winning lots of friends, even if she is neither a beauty nor an heiress.

And now, if the debutante is not tired of hearing about herself—and I don't think she is—a word about her wardrobe.

Her evening dresses, however smart and pretty, must be of the simplest description. Muslin, chiffon, crepon, or white silk, cut round in the neck, and rather high, with much satin ribbon by way of trimming, but no heavy satin or moire. Round full waists, and shoulder puffs are the accepted fashions for the bodice, and full skirts just touching the floor all round. Dinner dresses may be rather more elaborate, and there is more choice as to color. Pinks, pale blues, greens or yellows, are suitable, and satin is sometimes seen, but always veiled softened by chiffon, gauze, or some other filmy material.

As for street dresses, they are pretty much the same for the debutante, as for anyone else, except that they are slightly less elaborate and the trimming is not so rich. In short, simplicity in all things is the rule.

Whistling as Exercise.

Mrs. Alice Shaw, the American whistler, says: "Such health as I have had since I began this magnificent exercise must be seen to be appreciated. My chest measures have increased four inches; my throat measures three inches, and my lungs expand five inches. The muscles of my neck and of my face have had a course of training which they could not have received otherwise, not even from a face masseuse, and my lungs have become actually powerful." Mrs. Shaw recommends that doctors should try the whistling cure on their patients.

TO CURE DROPSY.

A New Treatment That Differs From the Old Methods and is Invariably Successful.

McINTYRE, Ont., March 11—Dropsy is due in the majority of cases to some disorder of the kidneys. It is one of the symptoms of Bright's disease and indicates an advanced stage of the disease. One reason why so many cases of dropsy prove fatal is that a wrong system of treatment is followed. If the cause be removed the disease will disappear. Make the kidneys all right and dropsy will go. This is the plan followed by Hugh Lamont of this place in the case of his fourteen-year-old son, who had dropsy since he was an infant. Mr. Lamont gave the boy Dodd's Kidney Pills and he is now thoroughly cured and hearty.

self and her mother to give the subject serious attention, because the matter of launching that fragile craft a daughter, requires it. Christmas and New Year are favorite seasons for young girls to make their first bow to society, but still we all know that Lent is a great time for the renovation and preparation of wardrobes, so at the door beside her mother, wearing the simplest and daintiest of costumes, from white mull to china silk, and the most bewitching of smiles.

In this way the debutante is sure of starting out with plenty of friends to help her on her way, instead of being obliged to climb the long hill alone.
