Canon Farrar's "Christ in Art" is a remarkable book, and will be read with great interest by all classes everywhere. Excluding music and archilecture and saying little about scripture, he confines himselt to painting and shows that for five centuries after the Ascension no one ever dared to paint a crucifixion. The popular conception of Christ in the early church was the strong, the joyous youth of eternal growth, of immortal grace, as majestic, triumphant, beardless, beautiful. Never in those early ages was the crucifix deemed the appropriate symbol of Christianity; that was the work of a later age and never is the effort made to stimulate piety by a portrayal of the agonies of the gardens and of the cross. The book throws a good deal of side light upon current controversies and is written in Dr. Farrar's usual felicitous style.
