THE SONGS OF CANADA.

There is now in course of compilation at Montreal a collection of Canadian national songs, with music. The leading spirit in this laudable undertaking is WILLIAM D. LIGHTHALL, the Canadian poet-critic who showed to the world what splendid work the poets of a new country could do when he made a collection of "Songs of the Great Dominion." Mr. LIGHTHALL and his assistants desire the of the land of the rising sun would better words and notes of songs about Canada not behave with undue treshness to the peothat have been set to music, and the ple of the empire on which, as someone words of songs concerning this country once observed, the sun never sets. that have not been set to music.

right feeling is the vital spark of strong writing, and that publicity, publicity, is the greatest moral factor and force in our public life." This is Mr. JOSEPH PULITZER'S idea as to that factor which EMERSON long ago designated as "the best policeman."

A Nova Scotian is mixed up in the affairs of the troubled country which Mr. P. A. NANNARY describes so graphically for PROGRESS. Among the names of those arrested at Hawaii, as implicated in the attempt to overthrow the government of that country, appears "DANIEL LOGAN, the editor of the Bulletin." Mr. LOGAN was once editor of the New Glasgow Eastern Chronicle.

"Cremation," says the Rochester Post-Express, "is not obtaining much headway, as it has to fight natural repugnance and christianity." As the chief reason for cremation is the desire that the living may not suffer disease because of the dead, the idea which is undoubtedly at present viewed by many with repugnance would seem to be on the same side as christianity.

Says the Bangor Commercial: "The great state of New York, 177 years after Burgoyne's surrender at Saratoga, declared her independence Friday when Gov. MORTON signed the bill forbidding the display of toreign flags on public buildings." This may seem to some to Le a queer way of declaring one's independence.

potent means of fanning into holy flame the fires that burn within the breast of any good countryman of any good country than good patriotic songs. There is no country that should inspire loftier song-sentiments than the "child of nations, giant-limbed," which name one of her most gifted children gave to her in song.

It was a St. John man who, seeing Canada's urgent need for a national song, wrote the most popular patriotic melody ever written by a Canadian. It was another St. John man who composed the music for it. Not only in Canada, but in every part of the world where Canadians have gone, has this song brought to the wanderer sweet memories of his own Canadian home. It is only a few weeks ago since an admirable national hymn appeared, the words | at the houses of the nobility and gentry. by a St. John poet, the music by a St. Those of the nobility and gentry who do John musician. It is worthy of a prominent place in the new collection. St. John should be proud of what her sons have already done in the line of national song, and this city's many other accomplished poets and composers should be well represented in the forth coming volume, as well as the other maritime provincialists who have done good work in the line of music and poe'ry.

"Let me make the songs of a people, and I care not who makes the laws," has long been a popular saying. But it cannot have been fame that the framer of that wish longed tor, as the names of the makers of the songs that most stir the hearts of nations are frequently enshrouded in oblivion. It is, however, the intention of the compilers of the new book of Canadian patriotic songs that not only the songs of Canada, but also the names of their authors and composers, shall live with the new nation.

According to a contemporary, a lady telegraph operator, who was asked the other day how she intended to vote, replied as tollows :

> I'm sitting on the fence, sir, And there I mean to sit To see who'll raise my salary, The tory or the grit.

There are some people who have the right of franchise, or who are in positions more affected by the result of an election than that of a telegraph operator is in Canada, who display a somewhat similar spirit in regard to their position in politics.
