PROGRESS, SATURDAY, MAY 18. 1895.

LITTLE NAN.

Written for PROGRESS.

It was the close of a hot summer day; Elisabeth Farren dropped her busy hands in her lap, and bent forward slightly to watch the passers by.

The quaint yellow stone cottage in which she lived stood well back from the road in its own grounds; the door was at the side, where the flower garden was laid out in beds ot bloom ; the window at which Elisabeth sat looking down to the road. Two fine cherry trees, well laden with fruit, stood near the gate; Elisabeth could remember when they were planted. She and Nancy and Jick had all looked on, and now she was the only one left; and getting quite old, she told herself, thirty years old next week; why, even Jack would; not know her if he ever came back; but there was small chance of that, fourteen years was a long, long time, and men soon forget. "We were only children," she thought, but a tender light shone in her eyes, as she lived again in the bygone times. And Nancy, little Nancy, the pet and darling of the house. Oh! who could say where she was? And the tears started to Elisabeth's eyes.

A voice broke in on her musings, "Elisa both, do watch those boys, and see they don't steal the cherries."

Elisabeth rose, and the next moment passed the window, on her way to the gate. Leaning over it she watched the passing school boys out of sight, then slowly returned to the house, breaking off a spray of wild roses as she passed, and tucking longed to?" them in her belt returned to find all in confusion, where she had left peace. To find the invalid mother in tears, and her own name being called in angry accents by her father, and the cause of all this disturbance-a little child.

Seated in the mildle of the floor, where she had been discovered, two seconds before, by the angry old man; vainly trying to replace a shoe on an obstinate little foot, was a tiny little girl, with her blue eyes very wide open as she contemplated the disturbed countenances before her. Elisabeth gazed in speechless amazement. There was no child there when she left the room, and no one had passed her; it would be a bold child indeed who entered those gates while Squire Farren was able to be about. This evidently was a bold child, for it was not in the least disturbed by its position, but gazed calmly around as if at home.

of pink in her cheeks, and she looked more animated than her hashand had seen her look for years. She had faded slowly since the day her youngest daughter, the pride of her father's heart, had dared to cross his will, and marry the poor struggling doctor she loved with all her heart, instead of the wealthy man he had chosen for her.

The Squire never spoke to her again. He told her to choose between her doctor and her home, and she made a choice, and passed out of their lives. That the one on whom he had lavished the most of his love should have dared to cross his will, was more than the proud, seltwilled man could bear; her name was never spoken before him, was rarely spoken even by Elisabeth, for the least mention upset her mother, and the least sign of agitation on her part would call up the demon of ill-temper, which rarely slept now, in the Squire's heart. He had nursed his pride and illwill, until he had become a slave to them, and though he saw that the separation from her daughter was slowly breaking his wife's heart, he loved his own way too well to give it up even for her sake. Something in her look tod 1y, took him back to old times, and he stooped and kissed her, before asking, in a milder tone than he had thought possible a minute before :

found its parents ?"

"No, Robert. She sobbed herself to sleep, so Elisabeth went to lay her down on her bed. Did you find who she be-

"They took pretty good care not to let me find them. But they need not think I'm going to keep her. She goes to the workhouse tomorrow."

I think the Squire fully expected his wife to protest, when he would have had the pleasure of maintaining his own way regardless of any one else; but the little woman was wise in some things and knew trom experience that opposition only ma de her husband keener after his own way, 80

Squire Farren was in his chair to all appearances, but in reality he was far away, windering through the lanes, with an imperious little maiden tugging at his hand, and demanding the roses which grew bevond his reach.

> Was he still in the long ago, or was he dreaming? Surely this was Nancy herself, demanding her breakfast in an injured tone. He came to himself with a start. Little Nan, tired of being left to herself, had crept to his side. "I'se hungry, give Nan her bektas', p'ease," came again in a plaintive tone.

With the old memories still fresh in his mind, Squire Farren lifted the little girl on a chair, and proceeded to spread her bread, and pour her milk. It seemed like a dream to him as he did it, and hoped he would not wake up.

"Take 'you own bekfas', dranpa," said Nan, regarding him with wondering eyes. The squire woke up then, but he woke up from more than his dreams. Seeing tears in his eyes the little one left her chair, and climbing on his knee, patted his face with her tiny hands, and besought him "not to ky," adding as a special comfort, "Muzzer will be here soon.

The squire down and cried like a child. but the tears and little Nan's soft fingers loosened the icy band around his heart, and the seeds of love and goodwill sprang "Where's that child? Has Elisabeth up there. Elisabeth came to the door, and paused there, amazed at the sight which met her view, then softly turning away to bear the good news to her mother. A little later the Squire was summoned to the study there to find, in the person of the courteous stranger, who had been so interested in his search the day before; the boy, who had grown up with his children, till his father's removal from the village.

Jack Gibson told his tale in a straight-forward, manly way, though there was evidently a slight uneasiness in his mind as to how the squire would receive it. Making his way slowly homeward, on the death of his tather; he had come across Nancy, a widow, with one little girl, living in a

AN OLD LADY OF OVER 80 YEARS. HER RIGHT SIDE WAS BADLY PARA-LYZED.

Sufferings Were Such That She Wished to Die.

Paine's Celery Compound Saved Her Life and Renewed Her Strength.

MEDICINE FOR BEST THE OLD AND YOUNG. THE

parents can have their lives prolonged, well as from their friends and relations. and their years made happy and joyous | lauding the strengthening and rejuvenby the use of Paine's Celery Compound. ating powers of earth's best medicine. Many old people suffer from nerve troubles, rheumatism, kidney and liver N. S. now in her eighty first year, has complaint, sleeplessness and terrible just sent in convincing and cheering paralysis. With such dangerous disease testimony regarding the value of Paine's clinging to them, they are liable to drop Celery Compound; ste writes as foloff at any inoment.

in the welfare of the old people, we will Celery Compound has been a great blessanxiously seek to use the agency that ing to me. In November, 1893, the whole

Mrs. James Cain, of Perott Settlement,

If we are truly and honestly interested | "I am happy to state that Paine's will best meet their troubles. In the of my right side was paralyzed, and Paine's Celery Compound and the Wills past, thousands of our aged people have the doctor said I was too weak to take English Pills that accompany the com-

It is now an established fact that our ing a happy old age. Every week new for a short time, but felt so bad, that I dear fathers and mothers and our grand- testimony is received from old people, as 1 wished to die, as I thought death would be a great relief to me.

In my weak condition I be ran usin Paine's Celery Compound. The first bo tle gave me relief. I continued to use the compound, and I have gained health. strength, and flesh, and my friends say I look quite healthy. Although in my eighty first year, my limbs are getting stronger, and I hope soon to be quite myself again.

pres.

A

I would advise all who softer from paralysis and other troubles to use

Of the marvelous success of Purdock

Blood Bitters lies in its specific carative power over every organ of the body.

The Liver, the Blood, the Bowels, the Stomach, the Kidneys, the Skin, the Bladder, in fact, all parts of the human system are regulated, purified, and restored to perfect natural action by this medicine. Thus it CURES all diseases affecting these or other parts of the system, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Bad Blood, Biliousness, Headache, Kidney and Liver Complaint,

Obstinate Humors, Old Sores, Scrofula,

Rheumatism, Nervous or General

Debility, and all irregularities of the system, caused by Bad Blood or dis-ordered action of the Stomach, Bowels,

Liver or Kidneys. Thousands of testimonials warrant the assertion that

B.B.B. is the BEST SPRING

MEDICINE FOR YOUNG OR

HE

SECRET

12

....

"How did she come here? Who dared to bring her ?" stormed the squire.

"Hush, Father, you will frighten her, will try to find out ;" and Elisabeth dropped rubbing her eyes with her tiny fists, and on her knees by the little one, with a queer looking Elisabeth up and down, in an pain at her heart, as she noticed a strange old-fashioned way that was irresistibly resemblance to that long lost sister of funny. whom she had been thinking only that dered.

"Who are you, dear ?" she asked.

The child looked up in mild wonder. "I'se little Nan," came in calm baby tones. A burst of tears from the sofa, and you ?" an impatient exclamation from the squire greeted this answer.

"But where's your home?" asked Elisabeth, trying in vain to keep her voice from trembling. A burst of merry lughter came from the merry lips, and the owner evidently thought it all a joke, as she answered, "Yite here, of torse."

Squire Farren mide a hasty step forward, this was no joke to him.

"Stop this fooling at once, Elisabeth: me at once."

was no joke, now, for her pretty underlip dropped, and with a genuine howl of fright, she took refuge in Elisabeth's arms, hiding her face on her shoulder, and sobbing out some unintelligible speech, of which the words "Zick," "told me" and "little Nan," oft repeated, were all that Elisabeth could understand.

"What does she say?" asked the squire, chafing heiplessly under the storm he had brought upon himself.

"I think she is trying to tell us, that someone she calls Jack brought her, and told her this was her home."

"I'll wager he did. Some thriftless scamp trying to foist his child on us. But I'll find him; I'll have him put in jail. glance at the sofa on which his wife lay, still sobbing, Squire Farren stamped out.

she said nothing; privately thinking it a good sign that he had not insisted on her going tonight.

Elisabeth slept little that night, it was such a new sensation to feel tiny arms around her; and the likeness and name awoke a hundred conjectures. She stepped softly about the room in the morning, till a merry laugh told her the little visitor was awake, and had evidently slept off the fright of last night. A bewitching little picture she made, with her tangled golden curls, and rosy cheeks : not one mite afraid of her new surroundings, she sat up in bed,

"Weil, do you know who I am?" ask. afternoon. Did they notice it? she won- ed Elisabeth, laughingly, stroking the golden tangle as she spoke.

The answer astonished her, for instead of the laughing "no" she expected; Nan answered calmly. "You is aunt Bess, isn't

"Who told you that, little N in ?" asked Elizabeth breathlessly.

"Muzzer told me, and Zack, Zick had a pixure, but you was a little girl in it, and he said to call you 'aunt Beff,' but I si'nt, tause muzzer said 'aunt Bess', and muzzer knows."

Elizabeth's heart beat so quickly, she was forced to sit down, before she could speak again. It was true then, the suspicion she had had, and this was really he ordered rougaly. "Where did you come Nancy's child, her own little niece. She from, child? Who brought you here? Tell needed no further proof than the names of her childhood : who had ever cilled her by

"Little Nan" seemed to realize that it them but the little sister, and the playmate of long ago. And then it came to her to wonder how they had come together, and where was Jack now.

But a call from her father told her she had no time to waste in questioning, and hastily dressing little Nan, she lead her into the dining-room.

"What made you so late? Your mother wants you," said the squire testily. "And can't you keep that child out of my sight till she goes to the workhouse ?" Elisabeth turned and faced him, her face white, in expectation of the storm of rage which would burst upon her. "Father" she said, and her voice trembled as she spoke, for she was not a naturally brave woman, "father, I am sure that this is Nancy's child. Children ! indeed, I've had enough chil- have obeyed you all these years, though I dren, I think. No child shall stop here, have longed to know something of my mind that, ma'am," and with an angry sister, but if you send little Nan away, you will send me too."

She waited with drooping head for the to search the grounds and village, and ex- storm to burst, but the Squire had no pend his wrath on a police force, that spent words ready. That his meek, quiet all their time in the ale-house, instead of daughter who had borne his overbearing find her way to the Squire's heart, before the mother begged for that forgiveness she was not too sure of receiving. So Jack had brought Nan on, and entering the garden through a side wicket, familiar to him long ago, had watched his chance to leave her. Accustomed to meeting strangers, and having known of these new relations all her life, little Nan had done the rest, and Jack was well pleased to leave the house bearing the message for "muzzer to come soon." He did not leave the grounds however, till he had transacted a piece of business on his own account, and convinced Elisabeth that some men had excellent memories.

There was a wedding in the olf village church not long after these events, but the chief interest of the onlookers was centred in a tiny little bridesmaid, whom it was quite evident was of more importance to Squ're Farren than even the bride.

A. PENNE.

Yet to be Found.

Old traditions die hard. The story that Bonaparte put a cheque for one hundred thousand francs in a silver five-franc piece, and that the coin is yet in circulation in France, has many believers. They say that the people did not want the five-franc piece, and that in order to create a demand for silver money of that denomination the Emperor resorted to the device mentioned. The cheque, or Treasury order, was written on asbestos paper and made in the coin. It would be interesting to know, if this story be true, how many five tranc pieces have been broken open since the story of the cheque was first circulated.

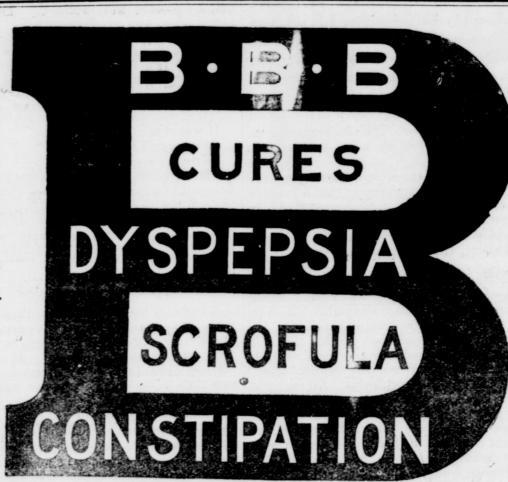

Blackie on Singing.

The late Professor Blackie had a pleaant bouse, "Altna-craig," picturesquely situated among trees on one of the hills which overlook the lovely Bay of Oban, and he was formerly a familiar figure in the little town; but since the invasion of the railway, in 1880, he had almost deserted it. He used to be seen abroad in a grey blouse suit, with a red silk sash round his waist, as a variation upon the plaid, and, indoors or out, was generally humming a cheerful "Sing, sing, man, sing !" said he, tune. one day, to a good Scot with whom he lodged for a time. "Why don't ye sing? Ye'll never go to the devil if ye sing !"

Ups And Downs In South Africa.

A writer in the South African Standard and Diggers' News describes some of the characters to be met with in Johannesburg. Here, shuffling along, goes a grizzled old gentleman selling newspapers, who a little while ago was a prosperous merchant in Na-There, another unwashed tatterdematal. lion, who was once a well-to-do business man on the very streets he now haunts; and hungry, fleeting glances into the bars, was ' the Princess of Wales with her fan.

town not very far away. Together they been rescued from death by Paine's much medicine; I managed, however, pound, and if properly used, they will had formed the plan of letting the little one Celery Compound and are now er joy- to use a little, and was able to sit up surely cure."

for some time a responsible manager of on of the leading banks.

Cure for Writers' Cramp.

Some stir has recently been made by the announcement of the discovery of a cure for writers' cramp. Massage and light gymnastics are given as the curative treatment. It is now about fifteen years since this course, with certain additions, was pursued by a number of persons in an American city. The same treatment has also been used as a cure for telegraphers' cramp or paralysis. One case in point occured during the last illness of President Garfield. One of the most expert telegraphists in the United States was so far overtaxed that his arm became numb, and there was a very visible contraction and shrivelling of the muscles. A person who had been cured of cramp by the process mentioned advised the young man to try massage, using at the same time applications of hot glycerine well rubbed into the muscles. For about five weeks the patient persisted in this treatment with the most satisfactory results, as the muscles regained all of their elasticity and the numbness and pain entirely disappeared. Since that time scores of persons have successfully tried the remedy.

Where Applause is Lacting

At the English court on the occasion of a state entertainment applause is unknown, and the writer of this paragraph has heard Mme. Albani sing some of her most beautiful notes, the only signal of success being an impressive hush on the part of the audihere, again another scarecrow, casting ence, and a gentle tapping on the hand by Hire's Root Beer.

OLD.

Is made direct from the finest and freshest roots, herbs, berries and flowers. A 25c. package makes 5 gallons.

Refuse All Worthless Imitations and Substitutes.

running in the tramps who stole and left temper so patiently, should suddenly oppose their children at other people's doors.

The Squire's search was unsuccessful; if he had received a shock. for of course it never occurred to him, that child who had startled them; even though | innocent cause of it. the gentleman had left his luggage at the his will was too much. The old man felt as

Elisabeth, finding herself unanswered, the stranger, who arrived by the late after- caught up a tray on which her mother's noon train and was staying at the inn, breakfast was set, and hastened from the could have had anything to do with the room, forgetting in her excitement, the

When the Squire's astonishment and station, and walked the whole way in, and wrath had cooled sufficiently to allow him seemed to take such an interest in his to speak, he found himself as he imagsearch. He walked home, swearing softly ined alone, and going over the speech to himself all the way, for it was something | which had enraged him in his mind again, new for him to find himself thwarted. The he wandered away from it into the long sitting room was empty, save for his wife ago, called up by the name that was on her sofa, from which she rarely moved never long absent from his mind though in the daytime. Today there was a shade | never spoken.

Summer Styles

Run to Full, Flaring Effects.

Fibre Chamois being lighter in weight than any other interlining, will su't these styles without making your costume a burden in its weight,

Fibre Chamois is stiff and full of spring, properties which it retains to the end in spite of crushing or dampness.

It is wide, 64 inches, and cheap, 35c. per yard; and will outlast any material, never pulling at the seams.

In 3 weights, he light weight being most suitable for summer fabrics. Every yard of Genuine Fibre Chamois is Labeled.

"Patented July 1890, Trade Mars Registered." The wholesale trade only supplied by The Canadian Fibre Chamois Co., Montreal.

####