It has not before been my lotto chronicle so sudden an sad a death as that of Miss Carrie Crompton which took place on Monday evening at the residence of Mr. J. F. Teed. Miss Crompton, who was one of the able teachers on the staff of the con-servatory of music, Sackville, had been spending her vacation with Mrs. Teed and while there suffered a severe attack of grippe, followed by nervous prostration, but was considered convalescent, so that her death was a shock to all. The funeral which took place on Wednesday was a very large one as many came from Sackville to attend it—the young English girl having made many warm friends there as well as here. The fact that all Miss Crompton's relatives live across the acean and were therefore unable to come to her makes the case a particularly sad one. The young ladies of the conservatory, with whom she was a great favorite, attended the funeral, as did also the professors of the university, and a large number of others.
