When Baby was Dead.

When baby was dead, And the golden rays of sunlight crept
In the quiet room, across the bed
Where he so gently, sweetly slept—
It seemed so strange not to hear him coo,
And catch at the light—like he used to do!

When baby was dead.

And mother's tear-scored lips reached down
To kis that face, the eves, the head,
And smooth the folds in the little night gown, I'd have bartered my soul to hear him coo, And reach up his arms like he used to do!

When baby was dead, Ah, my God! what a moan was wrung
From a broken heart as he avy as lead—
From lips where a baby song lately hung;
Ears strained to catch the tiny, soft coo,
And hear him laugh out—like he used to do!

When baby was dead, I could see no joy in the air of gloom-Hope into outer darkness fled! When God spoke soft through the desolate room A promise, some day we'd hear him coo, And see him reach up—like he used to do! -Atlanta Constitution.

The Sporting Prophet.

Many jokes have been made at the expense of the sporting prophet, who, how ever, survives in spite of his prophecies. During one season Dr. Shorthouse had no fewer than six prophets writing in his Mrs. O. S. Newnham and her young daughter paper. It happened that in a certain handicap there were seven starters. In the doctor's paper each of the six seers tipped a different horse; and, lo! the seventh horse, which none of them had mentioned, came in first. A friend of Dr. West, where he spent the winter, and is much im- Shorthouse, who had often warned him that in a multitude of vaticinators there is danger, ran up to him in the ring and exclaimed, flushed and triumphant, "Here's a pretty thing, Shorthouse! Six of your fellows have tipped six different horses for this race, and the only one they didn't name is first past the post! What do you say to that?" "My dear sir," the doctor answered, calmly, "it only shows there's room for another prophet.

and those who sit and enquire why it wasn't done

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and of diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill. in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicous use, the frailest systems are led into con-valescence and strength, by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It re lieves the drooping spirits of those with whom chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of in terest in life is a disease, and, by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep-imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strength ening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strength-ening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gaged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market.
