THE JUDGE'S REBUKE.

How an Australian Justice Cleared His Court Room.

Mr. Justice Hood, whe presides in the divorce court at Melbourne, recently remarked, in answer to an appeal made to him: "If ladies came to a divorce court they knew what to expect. I will not order anybody out of court." This puts an old Australian journalist in mind of an incident which happened in Melbourne twenty years ago. There was a case coming on in which some unwholesome details were expected to be disclosed, and Mr. Justice Barry was the judge. The court house was crowded, and among the visitors was a large percentage of women. On the case being called upon, the judge remarked, "I think it would be better it ladies would leave the court." There was a rustle of which I did, and a few bottles have Completely dresses, and it was thought there would, under such circumstances, be a general exodus of the fair sex, but the "rustling" only meant that the fair ones had more firmly settled themselves in their seats.

The judge paused for a few moments, and then remarked in a dignfied manner : "Perhaps I was not heard, or did not make myself sufficiently understood. I suggested that perhaps it would be better if in this case all ladies left the court." Still there was not a move, and, after another pause, his Honor observed sternly: "I suppose I must have been mistaken, but I was under the impression that there were some ladies in the court-proceed with the case, Mr. Crown Prosecutor." This proved too much for the ladies, and very soon there was not a petticoat in the court.

He "Tipped" Him the Gloves.

It is related of the famous Jones Hanway that on being politely reproached by a nobleman for not coming oftener to dine with him, he replied

"Indeed, my lord, I cannot afford it." On another occasion he was paying the string of servants who as usual, appeared on the scene as he was leaving the house he had visited.

"Sir your great-coat," said one, upon which he paid a shilling

The Speaker's Chair.

It is a wonderful chair in which the Speaker of the English House of Commons sits. It is raised a couple of steps from the ground, and looks like a grand sentrybox, with a sounding-board coming out from the roof. On the lower step, at the side, members stand in private conversa tion with the Speaker. In the arms of the chair are mysterious recesses, with pens and ink and papers and other things. The June's blazing sun saw Sherman draw His deadly lines 'round Kenesaw. With sure approach his earthworks crept, O'er fields by iron missiles swept, In fierc- assaults the soldiers fought, With patience in the trenches wrought.

One day it was my fate to be In a command of cavalry, Who, in a bold advance, were met By greater numbers, and be-et On front and flank, till brought to bay, With ranks thinned by the bloody fray, No valor can suffice to stay The madly charging hosts in gray. Our only hope was to retire, Girt by our carbines' ring of fi e, Maintaining the unequal fight, It, haply, desperation m gat. Till reenforcemen s came, or night Brought darknes-to coac : . . ou flight. Before re r at was turned to rout Help came; and with a ringing shout We stood to fight the battle out, Though yet the issue was in doubt.

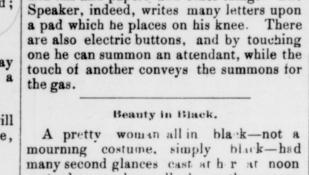

Timely the aid, but scant; our straft Might still be counted desperate. Behind us was a wile morass That, under fir-, we could not pass. Unless a victory was w in Our doom was death or Anderson.

Loud from the fince gray lines arose The rebel yell. We saw them close For the assault; then burst the flame From all our guns as on they came They paused not for the leaden hail: I saw my comrades' cheeks grow pale.

Then o'er our heads there shricked a shell That seemed all hissing-hot from hell. Amids: the charging toe it sped, Leaving a track of maimed and dead. Full voiced our battery now awoke, In tones of glee its thunder spoke, Our loud hurrahs rang glad and free, For life and hope and victory.
