The recital given at the Morley Conservatory of Music on Tuesday evening was very largely attended by a most select and appreciative audience who listened with great delight to the organ numbers played by Mr. Stocks Hammond, whose reputation as a musician is well established; Mr. Hammond who like most other men of genius is a trifle erratic in his movement, was some what late in putting in an appearance, but the time was very pleasantly passed in conversation and watching the late arrivals. Rev. John M. Davenport whose second song was the last, but one, on the programme sang that number while awaiting Mr. Hammond's arrival; Mr. Davenport was suffering from a severe cold but was received with a great deal of enthusiasm; I thought however that his song "The Promise of Life," was very much better than "But the Lord shall gather;" every word was perfectly distinct and there was considerable feeling in his voice; Mr. Davenport's and Miss Massie's rendition of "Love Divine" was very nicely done indeed. Of course the great feature of the evening was Mr. Hammond's numbers and that he delighted every body, goes without saying; his numbers were "Last Judgment, Op. 9;" "Offertoire in F, Wely; Minuet and Allegro Finale from organ Concerto No. 1, Handel; Melodie in F."
