

NOW FIRST PUBLISHED.

A SOLDIER'S STORY,

BY GORDON STABLES, M.D., R.N.

Author of "The Rose of Allandale," "For Money or For Love," "The Cruise of the Land Yacht 'Wanderer,' " "Our Friend the Dog," etc., etc.,

COPYRIGHTED, 1895, BY GORDON STABLES, M. D., R. N.

SYNOPSIS OF PREV OUS CHAPTERS.

CHAPTERS 1 & 11.—Major Joselyn Lloyd is a kind hearted soldier who wins the Victoria Cross in the Afghan War. He meets the author while on a tour to Scotland and they become fast friends. Major Lloyd proposes they go to a seaside place called Battlecombe. While there he moets Ella Lee, and learns to love her. One evening he invites his triend Gordon to accompany him to his organ practice and be introduced to Ella Lee. During the recital Ella Lee drops a telegram. Gordon sees this, picks it up, and puts it in his pocket. When he opens the message it is from a person named "Jack." Gordow wonders it "Jack" is a lover, and if his friend has given his love in vain. if his friend has given his love in vain.

Ella Lee has no prother, so concludes that it foust be a lover. He resolves to ask Ella Lee the meaning of the telegram, and who was the sender. He was unconsciously forewarns her of his object, so she explains that "Jack" is her sister Nellie. Joss tells Gordon that Ella Lee has accepted him as her future husband. Later, Gordon is introduced to Nellie, who he finds quite under his sister's inof his meetings with Ella Lee, tells her of his form-or loves, Molly Morrison and Cynthia Singleton. He afterwards repeats those love tales to Gordon.

CHAPTER XV.-(Continued.)

But let us follow Jocelyn to town He hailed a hansom on his arrival at the plat-T Prm

As his hansom left the terminus, another followed it, though quite unknown to my friend. This latter contained not only a a gentleman, but a lady as well. Stay, though, let me alter that last sentence. Why sully the sacred names 'lady' and 'gentleman' by applying them to the creatures who under the name of private detective, earn their living by a system of espionage more mean and disgraceful as a profession than that of the area sneak who purloins beer cans, or the prig who steals one's handkerchief. And yet these despicable wretches live and thrive in our midst. It is a wellknown fact, too, that they not only find their way into the best society, but that very often they belong to it. And that they have often they belong to it. And that they have broken up and ruined many a happy family. going into action, when there is no more money to be had. You see I am a woman I myself could adduce ample evidence to of the world. Ah! Mr. Jones, it is I alone prove. Such a state of things in our country | who keep your head above the stream. In is to say the least, decidedly un-English, | a year's time we'll see. though it may be French.

it will do the reader no barm to know, is Jack, has had.' sketched from life,. Unluckily it is one 'Other tool!' thought Jones, but he

She started back immediately. 'Oh ! I beg ten thousand pardons,' she cried, 'I thought you were alone, Mrs. Gray. I came from Oswald's, about a pic-You could not have heard me knock ture. will call another time.

Hardly had Lily time to get up and walk towards her before the door was again closed, and Miss Smith was gone. 'Mr. Jones,' said Miss Smith quietly, but smiling all over, 'I must do you the credit of saying you are improving. I have nearly enough evidence to sink an ironclad.'

'Cabby, drive to the City !' "Where to, Miss ?"

'To the Savoy.' 'Mr Jones' she added pleasantly, 'we shall dine. You shall dine with me. am getting a better opinion of you. 1 used to think you were like the moon, you know. ·Cold and bright ?'

'Cold and bright indeed ! No, but made of green cheese.

Mr. Jones laughed an uncertain kind of a laugh.

'With compliments such as these,' he said, 'I am tain to be content.' After dinner that day, however, when Jones was smoking his meerschaum and sipping his coffee, Mliss Smith herself keeping him company with a perfumed cigarette, Mr. Jones proved there still was a little of the green cheesy matter in his brain. They were quietly discussing 'the Lloyd case,' as they called it.

'I snppose,' Jones said, 'now that your evidence is so complete, you will go into action ?

'Go into action !' cried Miss Smith, almost angrily. 'Don't be a fool, Mr. Jones. Never heard of the fable of the goose that was killed for its golden eggs? Talk of 'Now,' she added, lighting a tresh cigar-

The case of my poor friend Jocelyn Lloyd ette, 'I wonder what success that other tool nothing.

had caught the eagle eyes of Miss Smith. She might or might not have a case there. Again, there was a young man in the stalls who for months back had been riding the high horse. His career was nearly at an end. Another week would see him safely locked up in a dimly-lighted cell. He had been robbing his master systemati-

But to-night Jones had a duty to per-form. Between every act he might have been seen in the guise of a somewhat dissipated young man with a brandy and soda in his hand and his hat on the back of his head standing at the best refreshment bar. His cheeks were a trifle flushed-paint. His thoughts appeared to be equally divided between constant attention to his tumbler and his cigar, which he couldn't get to go, apparently.

But he managed to mingle freely with the very select company that crowded around him, displaying a vast deal of shirt front and precious little intellect, and Jones heard most that was said, and was able to retail it when he returned.

Jones had even asked the noble lord who was there with some laughing, chaffing "pals" for a light, and being politely accommodated had lingered for a time in their neighbourhood, his elbow resting carelessly on the counter the while. He chuckled inwardly as upon his ears fell scsaps of conversation and confessions such as the noble lord would certainly not have put in words had he known that close by stood a private 'tec shamming intoxica-

Jones paid a visit to this refreshment bar between every act, and of no small use was the information he picked up to Miss

From what I have already said it will be seen that though Mr. Jones was a partner in the firm of Smith and Jones, private tecs, he was not the chief by any means. He had on his part a very great respect for Miss Smith, and on hers she tound him exceedingly handy.

Miss Smith, by the way, whose real name, only the fear of libel prevents me from disclosing, was a lady by birth and education, though not in wealth. She possessed good manners, however, bon-ton and all that, and had bad the entree to the best societyand made the best of it.

'Do you think, Miss Smith, you see a case ?

He was referring to the noble lord in the private box. .What, divorce ?'

'Yes.'

Jones, private 'tecs, were seated so cosily and contendedly together in a private box of any sort. So let him slip. I may add, however, that Miss Smith

ing. No, for, truth to say, she 'bled' him, she sweated him, she 'blackmailed' him, age, as far as herselt was concerned. Well, these two long years, although they brought surcease of sorrow to Lily Andrews, whose sad life in Hong Hong seemed now but like the shadow of an evil dream, had greatly increased the trials and sorrows of my unhappy friend, Jocelyn

Lloyd. But just a few words Lily first. Speaking from a worldy point of view, she was far

The modest annual pension, or "com-

The lady laughed lightly. 'I can do passionate allowance,' as it insolently called better than that,' she replied. 'You are by the Lords Commissioners—a term that young in the profession as yet. Buf as reduces the widow of an officer who may regards his lordship he is wealthy. All have fought and bled, and even died sword noble lords are not so. Sometimes their in hand for his country, to the level of a wives are. In the latter case the wives, of beggar receiving a dole to which he has no as follows while I did so: course, become my paymasters, or pay-mistresses. Jealousy is fanned and fost-keep the wolf from the door.

wished to experience something of the self, and because anything that is worth doing well, I determined not to let a stone lie unturned. if turning it should assist my my triend in any way whatever.

On my arrival at Paddington I chartered a hansom immediately. I choose it myself, one with rubbers, and just as it had got about a quarter of a mile from the station I signalled my man to pull up at a to-seeing another hansom, evidently on my trail, arawn up some distance down the street. Once again during the journey drew up, at a shop. The same Jehu and trap was still about the same distance be-bidding my man wait for me. As the other hansom was but a little way down the street, I felt sure that the fun was not yet all over. I should have been sorry indeed had it ended here, for it was now becomrather intelligent-looking crossing-sweeper boy here, and after walking about a short time and gazing up at the houses, I put to him a question.

Cottage ?

'Mrs. Grieg's sir ?'

ed with me towards it to find sixpense, and spoke to him quietly treet, boy. Don't look, but listen. By and bye a lady will descend, and come here. Watch for her till she comes out, follow her back to her hansom, and under pretence of shutting the doors find out where she is going. You shall have halta-crown if you bring me the information." 'I'm on, sir,' said the boy, touching his

She required no second bidding. She made no reply, but positively skulked away crest-fallen.

15

I now bade Lily a hurried adieu ! telling her, needlessly, not to forget her appoint-ment, and dashed off.

As I reached the gate I noticed that the lady-'tec's bansom had already turned head, and was moving away, while the boy crossing-sweeper was coming quickly down towards the cottage

He was all smiles.

'I dun it, sir. Neatly, sir. There's two on 'em, a lady 'as well 's a gent, and they told the cabby, 'Savoy Hotel, Thames Embankment.'

His eyes sparkled as I handed him the half-crown, which, after spitting on for luck, he put safely away. He held open the hansom doors till I got in.

'Cabby,' I said, talking up through the hole, 'Savoy Hotel. and you'll have an extra fare if you keep that other hansom in sight till the occupants land.'

'I'm going to earn that extra fare,' he said.

Then down went the lid and drove.

The shadowers would now be shadowed. (To be continued.)

If You Suffer

The Fault is Your Own.

Paine's Celery Compound Earth's Only Cure for all Forms of Rheumatism.

Hundreds of twinges of pain and hours of agony every day; weeks and months of helpless suffering, and still you go on from Acacia Cottage at last, and I got down bad to worse, until you become crippled and deformed.

If you are a constant martyr to rheumatism and its tortures, the fault is your own. You might easily have avoided all the ag-onies of past days and nights, had you used Paine's Celery Compound.

You cannot plead the excuse that you did not know of such a disease-conquering medicine. You surely have heard your friends speak of it. The newspapers have heralded thousands of victories won by Paine's Celery Compound over rheumatism; and if your physician has failed to tell about the great modern rheumatic cure, he has kept the truth from you for his own benefit.

If your are now in agony, you are certainly in peril. You must to day give up experimenting with useless medicines and use a truly scientific remedy like Paine's Celery Compound, which will surely remove the cause of your suffering, and per-

You are not by any means in a hopeless

state. Be assured, Paine's Celery Compound will deliver you from your present bondage of agony. Notwithstanding your past failures with nervines, sarsaparillas,

bitters and pills, Faine's Celery Compound will give you the new life you are so eagerly looking for. Try it; there can be no

Mr. W. McWilliams, of Bradford, Ont ...

"Unsolicited, I forward this testimonial

as to the value of Paine's Celery Compound. I am pretty well up in years and was sorely afflicted with rheumatism. I purchased and used six bottles of your medicine, and am now perfectly well."I

NEW COMETS DISCOVERED.

Prof. Swift Notes Two in Daylight With the Naked Eye.

Professor Lewis Swift, of Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, California, has discovered a comet by means of his unaided vision. Here is his own story of it

'The comet that I have just seen, without the aid of a telescope, has not, so far as I have been able to learn, been seen by any one else. The way I happened to see it was this: When one-third of the sun-

had set below the mountain I noticed peculiar luminous object, about one degree above the sun's upper limb. It was at once apparent that the object could

'The conclusion that it was a comet was soon reached by me. Seizing an opera glass I closely inspected the luminous object, and found that it steadily increased both in size and brightness. You must understand to fully appreciate my surprise that it is a very unusual thing to see a a pair of spectacles. The glass revealed still another surprise, howover, for by its aid I learned that there were two comets,

one of which was that which had become visible to me without the aid of a glass. The second one, when the telescope was turned full upon it, seemed of unusual size and the sun and the comets slowly sink from view behind a spur of the Sierra Madre mountains. The glasses that I used in surveying the second comet were of the ordinary sort you see at the theatre. The next day I was at the observatory engaged in studying the heavens with my 41/sinch comet seeker. I swept around the sun to get, if possible, another view of the two comets I had seen the previous day. When the sun's disc had half disappeared below

the mountain peak I detected what I supposed was one of the comets. Its faintness surprised me, however, for it appeared no brighter to me than when I first looked at

it with the naked eye.'

Within about five minutes I saw both neither be a star for the planet Venus.

have no rheumatism left."

from the New York Herald :

an old sufferer from rheumatism, says :

manently cure you.

failure.

his wife, despite the way she treats him, and I believe would die sooner than do anything underhand that could lead to action against her. But we'll see.' CHAPTER XVII - "THE SHADOWERS WOULD NOT BE SHADOWED." Nearly two years have passed by since that evening when Miss Smith, and Mr.

at the Vaudeville.

I have little to say concerning the noble lord and his companion. He is not one of the heroes of this story. It would take a deal, indeed to make a man like him a hero did not let him slip so easily as we are do-and that too, to some considerable advant.

better off now that her husband was dead, than ever she had been while he lived.

bacconist's shop. As I des ended I had the pleasure of hind, and waiting.

ing quite interesting.

Luck seemed on my side. There was a

'Can you tell me, boy, which is Acacia

'That is the name, boy.'

He came running towards me and walk-

At the gate I put my hand in my pocket

'There is a bansom a little way down the

that is by no means rare, where the greeneyed monster, jealousy-in many cases a ruling passion with women-takes possesion of either husband or wife, occupying and engrossing the whole mind or soul to the utter extinction or exclusion of that most sacred of all passions, conjugal love, which it ruthlessly tramples under toot.

It would be bad enough if jealously of this sort, fostered and fed by those 'Gila monsters.' The Gila lizard is the most dreaded of reptiles. Not only is it deadly poisonons, but having once caught hold, only a knife can make it quit. The private 'tecs, brought suffering only to the father or the mother, but-and O, the pity of-even in its mildest form it casts a gloom or sadness over the lives of helpless children that shadow darkens their whole lives, and even helps to fill the drunkards' cell and the maniacs' ward.

The prtvate 'tecs. then followed Major Lloyd to Acacia Cottage. They drew up a and a run. little way down the street, but they saw him alight. 'Miss Smith,' said Mr. Jones, after Jocelyn had entered, 'I have an idea.'

'Mr. Jones,' said Miss Smith, who was the cleverer of the two, 'if there is anything in it. I shall be pleased to listen. But really, Mr. Jones, ideas leave cards on you so seldom that-

'Stay, stay, Miss Smith, don't be too hard. But for me you know well enough Sir Andrew Trevelyan would never have got bowled over in the Divorce Court.' 'And not a word of truth in atter all, ha, ha !'

'That didn't signify at all in the main, as you might say. We got paid.' 'True, true, Mr Jones, and I got introduced to Sir Andrew but lately at a place of entertainment at Paris. A pretty piquant petite little body was with him, who was not yet married to him. I told him with my usual trankness the part I had taken in his case. He grasped me by the hand. 'I have to thank you, Miss Smith,' he cried effusively, 'for separating me from a tyrant and a termagant, I am now the happiest and freest man in Paris or London.' But Mr. Jones, trot out your idea, if, indeed, it is worth while airing."

'You're not very complimentary, certainly, Miss Smith. But my idea 15 this. Get down and get inside Acacia Cottage. You'll find an excuse. Go

Miss Smith alighted and commenced walking slowly towards the Cottage.

She did not hurry. She found Gowan in the garden, and spoke to her. Then she gave her some pretty little picture cards and tiny Parisian boxes of sweets. N.B.-Miss Smith never went without these in her pockets.

aw Was Miss Smith fond of children then? U, very. She found them very handy too, and many a time and oft had she elicited from innocent infant lips little facts or tiny scraps of information which she had atterwards used as evidence to ruin the life of a father or mother, or drive him or her to drink or to suicide.

Gowan and Miss Smith got on tamously together.

Meanwhile Jocelyn and Lily were seated side by side in the cosv little parlour she used as a study. Her face was wet with tears, and he was holding her hand and doing all he could to soothe her; all a brother could and ought smiles and dimples. His daughter, no

CHAPTER XVI. - THE CAMERA CAN NEVER TELL A LIE.

'I'm so sorry this lady went away in such a hurry,' said simple Major Lloyd. 'She undoubtedly came about work, dear Lily.' My friend was right, poor man. She looked a pertect lady and full of business,' he added.

Yes, poor Joss, and all the worse for Jocelyn now got up and rung the

Mrs. Grieg came bustling in.

'Did the lady leave any address, Mrs. Grieg ?'

'Dear me, no, sir. And I forgot to ask. was a sort of confused like. She just said she would be sure to see Mrs. Gray another time.'

Then Gowan herself came in with a rush

'O, that dear lady,' she cried. 'Look, ma, at the pretty cards and sweets she gave me. And there is some for you and some for Uncle Doss.'

That same atternoon Major Lloyd was closeted with his solicitor and army agent. 'The lady,' he was saying, 'is a daughter of a clergyman-dead, and her mother too-who lived in Cornwall. Her uncle is a dear friend of mine, Colonel Singleton, whose sister the rector married, and he lives, a hale and hearty man of eighty or nearly, down in Chichester. Well, Lily, that is Mrs. Percy Foster, whose melancholy married life I have described to you, is my adopted sister.' 'Isn't it rather an unusual thing,' said the agent, 'to adopt a-a-sister, Major Llovd ?'

Well, well, some day I'll tell you the whole sad story. Then you'll know how far I'm right or wrong. Meantime let me proceed. My sister for some years, ever since her arrival in England indeed, has supported herself by painting and acting. In both capacities she has assumed a different name." 'I see. That is not unusual, I believe.' 'No, and her name is Mrs. Gray. This in confidence.'

'Certainly.'

Well, she will call on you, and I trust you can become her agent as well as mine. Certainly,' said the agent again, as he rapidly turned over the leaves of a reference book, 'and I note she is entitled to a pension or compassionate allowance of £50 a year, with £10 a year for her child.' 'That is so. Is there anything else ?'

'I think not,' said the agent. 'Call on me when next in town. Good day.'

Miss Smith was good to her partner

Jones that evening. She took him to the theatre-Vandeville

I may as well mention, however, that it was not solely for enjoyment's sake that Miss Smith had come to the theatre on this occasion. She had the happy nack of combining business with pleasure. For instance there was a noble lord in a private box just apposite-an old man, quite. Nevertheless, there sat beside him a sweet young thing in a cloak of crimson, with ermine fur around it. She was all doubt? Well the owner of opera-glasses in ered, and probably the case comes to court. is rich. He shall pay, and the case will never come before Jeune." 'And you have evidence ?'

thing else You know I went to Chelten. doubted not she could get ends to meet, ham the other day j'

'I do, Miss Smith. 'Well, the noble lord went also. At replow station a lady entered the same compartment, The lady sits beside him and so did Jocelyn. now.

'Interesting.' 'Yes. Well, there are some beautiful drives and lovers' walks near to Cheltenham. On a rustic seat in one of the latter his lordship sat one evening with his beauti ful companion, when a poor girl with a ragged shawl round her herd-you know Mr. Jones, how well I can act-came up to The noble lord threw the poor girl half a sovereign. But the happy pair had al-ready been photographed. This is substantial evidence.

She placed the photo before Jones os she spoke, and handed him a large glass to examine it withal.

'Marvellous!' said Jones. A compliment that was meant as much for Miss Smith's long headedness, as for the surprising clearness and beauty of the photo. 'You see, Mr. Jones, even a lady may bear false witness. but the camera can never tell a lie.' 'Pity,' said her partner,' you hadn't-

'Oh !' she interrupted, 'I know what you would say. But I did. Look-She handed him another well-developed

photo. 'Why !' he cried, scratching his head with astonishment, 'This is Major Lloyd and Mrs Grav.' Miss Smith smiled triumphantly.

'Yes,' she said, 'and that was taken instaneously to-day, and developed one hour after. 'But,' she added. 'in the Major's case I am not sure yet how the case will go. We can afford to wait a year at least. But don't you see it may pay us to let the Major her against him." ·Could that be managed ?' 'Easily; through that fooi, Jack. There is only one thing that might mar our chance known to Mrs. Lloyd. of this.

'And that is ?'

Good day, and thanks greatly.

-and they occupied a private box.

After another month's residence at Mrs. But as I said that young, old lord yonder Grieg's she had intimated to me that her great ambition now was to rent a tiny cottage in the country, all among the trees and lanes. Her child could have health and 'I have yours in part. But I have some- tuition, and with her brush she-the mother and live in comparative happiness, far away from the bustle and turmoil of the city and city life.

I myselt thought very well of the plan,

I therefore wrote to a friend in Sevenoaks and in less than a week I had a reply saying that he had found just the place. He himself appeared enraptured over it. 'It is indeed a sweet and tranquil spot, he wrote me, 'no far from a wood, not far from the village, a five-roomed cottage of artistic design, with porch and verandah, literally embowered in roses and wistaria.

A garden and lawn sweeping down to a stream, whose purling song in summertime would lull to sleep even an insomniast while in spring every brake. bush, and thorn is alive with bird melody. Quite the cottage for an artist, an author, or a poet. Will you not come down and see it? I would, and did.

But before running down, I determined o pay a visit to Lily and Jocelyn. Now, Jocelyn had told me about the visit of the strange lady to Lily-to Mrs. Gray, let us call her, for once-during the time he sat talking to her. He was so sorry, he said, that he had been there just at that time, for the lady evidently came to offer Lily work, and his presence must have scared her away.

I thought differently, though I said nothing to Jocelyn. That Lady, from what I had heard Jack tell Mrs. Lloyd was undoubtedly a private 'tec. I had heard, too, of the use that such people make of the art of instantaneous photography, and I had no doubt that the lady in question had entered the room with the intention of taking a picture, and had probably succeeded all too well.

Two evenings before my journey to town happened to be dining with the Lloyds, and took good care to mention my intendbring the action against the wife, instead of ed visit to town. My reasoning was that the lady-tec, whoever she was, must have an agent somewhere in our district, and that likely enough that individual was well

But why let my visit be known, it may be asked P

She who Runs

may read. No woman, if she can read, can for to know about Pearline. Then, if you'r worn out with hard work or find your clothes going to pieces, you've only yoursell to blame.

> You'll have to choose your own way of washing. You can use soap and the washboard, and tire yourself out. and \land rub your clothes to tatters.

You can use so-called washing-powders, imitations thief. of Pearline, and have easier work though they're eating up the clothes. Or you can use Pearline, wash in the easiest way, and be absolutely certain that there isn't the on the floor. slightest harm.

cap. 'As fly as a fluke, your honor.' Lily was delighted to see me, and I told her I was on my way to the Cottage, but that now I could not stay many minutes. I then explained to her briefly that presently a lady might call, the same who had looked in once before, when Jocelyn was here. That this lady was after no good, but wished to do me or Jocelyn harm, so that she must not be surprised at anything that might be said or done. Lily bravely promised not to be afraid, and we once more got talking about the little cottage.

,O,' she cried, as eagerly as a child might have done. 'I should so like to go with you.'

I considered for a moment. There could be no harm in this.

'Well, I answered, 'I shall do some business today in town, and postpone my run down to Sevenoaks till tomorrow torenoon. Meet me at Maynard's office tomorrow morning at ten.

'I'll be there,' she said, her face glowing with pleasure, 'and my little Gowan also.' Maynard's was the office of Jocelyn's agent. and Lily's also, so it was well-known to her.

The conversation now became general. but not very invigorating I fear from my side, for I was anxiously awaiting the arrival of my lady shadow. I had taken a through the wildow of the observatory, a seat not tar from the door, to be ready. Nearly half an hour had elapsed, and still she did not come, and I began to think she must be gone.

But presently light and stealthy footsteps were heard approaching, and next moment the door was thrown open wide and the lady entered. She carried over her arm a shawl, to which I noted her eves were directed even as she spoke. O, I beg your pardon, Mrs. Gray, a thousand pardons. I came about work. Your landlady thought you were disen. gaged.'

I could hear a teeble click, and knew I comet by daylight, very near the sun, and was photoed. to witness all this without even the aid of 'I will call later -----

She never finished that sentence. I sprang from my chair bristling with anger. 'Here, madam,' I cried, that game has been played just once too often. I am not such a fool as Major Lloyd.' 'What mean you, sir ?'

'I mean that you are a spy and a detective of the lowest, meanest class, worse than the veriest thief, It is not purses you steal. It is not man and woman's tangible jewels you purloin, but, as Shakspere calls it, 'the immediate jewel of their soul.' 'Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something, nothing : 'Twas mine. 'is his, and has been slave to thousands But he that filches from me my good name

Robs me of that which not enriches him, And makes me poor indeed.

This lady-'tec now lost her temper, the worst less a lady-'tec can sustain. 'I shall bring your companion, Mrs. Gray-Mrs. Gray would be a better name for her to witness that you called me a

'No, Jocelyn, it is not that I ever really circles or stalls who might have turned loved him. But now that he is dead and them in that direction would have believed gone, I cannot even think of his terrible so, but Miss Smith knew better. cruelties, I can only remember that he is This noble lord's wife was gray-haired is Gowanie's father, and that there were and stout. Though old, be himself still felt times when he spoke words of kindness to in his prime, and well, the company of both of us. And it is that makes me weep.' She leant towards him as if for consola-tion while she spoke, and he patted the ever, how far the noble lord's lady would hand he held in both his. have approved of such company as he was It was at this moment that the door now enjoying. Then in the dress circle there was another pair that more than once was thrown and Miss Smith entered.

Send Peddlers and some unscrupuious grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled. it Back and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest-send it back. 125 JAMES PYLE, New York.

'I have not called you a thief,' I said, A Typographical Error and I repeat it, that you are meaner than "That's a curious typographical error," said Mrs. Partridge. 'The title of this new book is printed 'The Viking Age.'' held in htr left hand, and the camera fell on the floor. the veriest thief.' As I spoke I set my foot on it, and it cracked beneath by angry heel. 'Now then,' I shouted, 'leave the room When making preparations for your trip, "Now then,' I shouted, 'leave the room don't forget your teeth. This will at once and this house instantly, or I shall call a suggest "Odoroma" the perfect tooth powpolice to eject you.' der.-Druggists 25 cents.

brightness.