PUBLISHED BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT.

Her Promise True.

BY DORA RUSSELL.

Author of "Footprints in the Snow," "A Country Sweetheart," "A Man's Privilege," etc.

COPYRIGHTED, 1896, BY DORA RUSSELL.

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I., 11., 111.—Hugh Gilbert and Belle Wayland are bidding each other good by at Brigh-ton as he is about to sail for India with his regiton as he is about to sail for India with his regi-ment. Belle promises to be true and as rees to meet him that evening for a final farewell. Upon her re-turn to the hotel, where she and her mother are stopping she finds that Lord Stammore, whose brother was the husband of Mrs. Wayland's sister has arrived and has invited her mother and her to dine with him that evening. Mrs. Wayland goes but Belle feigns sudden illness and is left apparently asleep in her r om. After dinner Mrs. Wayland discovers that Belle has gone out to meet Gilbert and is very angry. Mrs. Wayland writes an account of the aftair to her sister, Lady Stanmore and the latter comes immediately to Brighton. CHAPTEB IV.-Lady Stanmore comes to Brighton CHAPTER IV.—Lady Stanmore comes to Brighton. CHAPTER IV.—Lady Stanmore comes to Brighton and has an important interview with Mrs. Wayland in which they decide Belle's future. Lady Stan-more reads a letter from Gilbert to Belle and lays her plans accordingly. She decides to intercept the letters between the lovers. Lord Stanmore be-comes deeply interested in Belle and invites his sister in-law, Mrs. Wayland and Belle to spend a ter waeks at his country residence. tew weeks at his country residence.

CHAPTER v.-Belle begins a dairy in order that she may send an account of each day to her absent lover. CHAPTER VI.-Lady St nmore thinks over the situation. She decides that Belie is not in love with Jack. Lord Richard Probyn calls upon the party, and invites them 'o visit him at Hurst hall. He is greatly smitten with Belle. Lady Stanmore opens a letter from Hugh Gilbert to Belle and burns it.

CHAPTER VII.-Lord Stanmore becomes jealous of Sir Dick. Belle tells Lady Stanmore of her en-gagement and that lady ridicules the idea. They go to Hurst Hall.

CHAPTER VIII .- Belle's diary continued. She tells Lady Stammore of her dream about Hugh. That lady decides to write Mrs. Bal'our.

310

12

ady decides to write Mrs. Bal'our. CHAPTER IX.—Lady Stanmore destroys a letter Belle has written to Hugh Gilbert. Jack Stanmore confesses his love for Belle to his sister in law. Mrs. Wayland falls ill and the st.y at Redvers court is prolonged. Sir Dick Probyn proposes to Belle and is refused Lady Stanmore gets a letter from Mrs. Balfcur who went to India on the same ship with Hugh Gilbert-It contains the start ing news of Hugh Gilbert's marriage to Miss Vane. Belle is told the rews and is greatly shocked. In taking a morning walk she breaks through the ice.

CHAPTER X. XI. XII.—Stanmore rescues Belle from drowning. She takes cold and has a severe illness. A letter arrives for Belle during her illness and is destroyed by Lady Stanmore.

CHAPTER XIII .- Belle is convalescent. Stanmore proposes to her and in her anxiety to show Hugh Gilbert that she too has forgoiten she accepts the offer. Stanmore and his sister in-law arrange matters and Helle acquiesces. The marriage is arranged for an early day.

CHAPTER XIV .- The eve of the wedding. Lady Stanmore writes to her friend in Bombay and tells her of the marriage and specially requests that the news be told Hugh Giblert whom she represents as a friend only of Belle's.

CHAPTER XVII — THE ICE WOMAN. Lord and Lady Stanmore return to Redvers Court. Belle is not happy and Stanmore sees that she has not learned to love him. Sir Dick and Lady Probyn call upon them and invite them to dine at Hurst.

They sat alone on the verandah of a small bungalow, situated half-way up the Malabar Hill. Evening had come at last, the fierce heat of a tropical sun had subsided, and faint and fragrant breezes stole up from the Indian Ocean, just stirring the palms, the plaintain, and the cocca nut trees that grew in rich luxuriance upon the hill slopes of this favored site.

'Do you know, Belle,' Hugh Gilbert said, presently; sometimes I think I am too happy in having you near me; and then an idea occurs to me which falls like a shadow across the brightness of my life.'

'Dearest,' she answered, 'we must have no shadows.'

'You can banish this at once and forever,

'Only tell me how,' she said, eggerly; only tell me how.'

'By answering a question, Belle; and I you will be candid with me.' 'You frighten me, dearest. What is it you would know ?"

'Tell me if you ever regretted coming away with me; if you ever grieve for what you have left behind ?"

'Never,' she answered, with an air of solemn conviction. 'It has never cost me a single moment's regret. How could you think so, Hugh ?'

He heaved a deep sigh and turned his face to where her eyes shone on him, calm, lustrous, and beautiful, like stars quivering through darkness; but he made no answer. Why did you ask me ?' she said present-

'Because I sometimes fear I have been selfish; that I have been cruel in taking you away from wealth, position, and all things the world regards as valuable.'

'The value of things lies not in them selves, but in what they are to us; and for me, all I have left tehind is worthless in comparison with the happiness I have gained,' she replied, drawing closer to him still. His arm was round her; his lips touched hers.

'My darling,' he said, his voice quiverirg with tenderness ; 'I think, now, my cup of happiness is full. Some wise man once said we should die when we reached the happiest moment of our lives, before time for sorrow had come. I teel I have nothing left to desire save one thing-to make you my wife. If the time were only come when we might marry.' She moved uneasily, as might a startled bird : her dream was disturbed. Presently he felt a tear fall upon his hand, when he started as if it had been a touch of fire 'Belle, what have I said; have I made pipe, but for once tobacco failed to have compound, with its trees and trailing flow-ers, and saw him walk down the white road to avoid meeting them that he might not with its border of dusty cactus leaves and | witness and perhaps add pain to their exrank dried grass. A few yards down he pression. At last she could bear the susturned to where she stood in the verandah, and kissed hands to her. she waving her handkerchief to him. When he went, her heart went with him, and with a listless step and a grave air she entered the shadowy sitting-room and sat down to think out her thoughts.

Since she had left England no letter had been written to her by friend or relative ; no message from them had reached her. If she had died she could not have been more separated from all those she formerly had known. The Marchmonts, Lady Stanmore, the Probyns, were now to her as the people of a dream. Save for the one friend, she had no friends in the world but he was all the world to her; she needed none but him.

Through solicitors in the first instance. and later through the English newspapers, she had learned of the divorce instituted by Lord Stanmore, and of the release from his marriage which he had no difficulty in obtaining, and the six months necessary to elapse between the verdict and the re-marthe day when in the sight of men Hugh Gilbert would be her husband.

Only a few days more and they would be united legally-a prospect that gave her intense satisfaction ; not that she would then be bound closer to Hugh, or he to her than now, but that the life which would be then be free from a heritage of shame.

At this thought a thrill of delight passed through her, and her eyes became dim with unshed tears. In a placid happy mood she busied herself all day long about the hou ehold cares of her dainty little home, going now and then into the matshaded verandah to gain the benefit of the breezes sweeping up the hill from the sea, which in imagination she saw is a glittering floor of emerald, stretching away into limitless space.

At last the time came when Hugh had said he would return, but as yet he had not come tack. He had probably, she considered, gone to the recreation ground, where English people meet to play tennis, drink tea, and talk scandal; a sacred circle into which she had as yet no right to penetrate, and into which, indeed, he had seldom intruded, and then only by the desire of his brother officers.

Later she began to wonder what detained him, and to desire his return, for she was pipe, but for once tobacco failed to have any relish for him. An engagement made some days before with some brother officers tcok him out after breakfast, and he left with the promise of returning before the mid-day heat set in, for never did he leave her for long alone. The doctor, a low sized, stout bothed, by her distress, and took her into his favor at once. Henceforth he would be her champion when women spoke ill of her. Whilst he felt Hugh's pulse, looked at his ner for long alone. The doctor a low sized, stout bothed, bad lessened, and consciousness had re-turned. There was a world of gratitude in his grey eyes; a world of happiness, in his soile, the smile which was to her the most "Belle," he whispered. She strove to steady her voice and an-"I cannot help my thoughts, and it shared The doctor, a low sized, stout bodied, > pense no longer. 'What is it, doctor ?' she asked, her voice trembling with apprehension. 'A slight attack, just a touch of his old fever,' he answered, striving to speak lightly of his patient's illness. gone?' she said, striving to smile. She drew in her breath, and a look of dread crept into her face. nervous myself, for you see I have had 'It cannot be serious,' she muttered with this fever twice before, and I suppose try lips, as if she would be convince herself there was no need to tear. 'It surely | 1 am superstitious, for I feared there must be something fatal in the third time,' Hugh cannot be serious ?'

'No, no !' Doctor Malone answered said, and taking one of her hands kissed it. cheerily. 'It may pass away in a few hours. Keep him quiet, my dear lady, let she cried out. him sleep as long as he can, and give him the medicine I will send you immediately gone. I suppose I have been unconscious?' you receive it,' and he prepared to leave.

'You will come soon again,' she said, imploringly.

'Of course I will; and then I hope to strength.' find him better, much better,' he added jauntily, as he bad her good day.

When he left she flung herself down be-side the bed on which Hugh lay sleeping know you will speak the truth : I know you | riage of either hust and and wife being now | fitfully. But for this one creature she was almost at an end, she looked forward to alone in the world, but for him her heart would be empty, her life would be deso-late. She bowed down her head in humbleness, in supplication, in appeal, but for long her parc.ed lips could frame no words. Then suddenly in a paroxysm of terror she flung out her arms, and raised her white face, crying aloud-'O, God, ushered into the world before long, would | spare him to me; spare him, or take me

CHAPTER XXXVII.-HIS GREAT DESIRE.

All through the quiet night Belle watched beside the man who was to her the sole reality in life. True to bis promise the doctor had called in the evening, advised certain treatment, spoken some hopeful words, and took his departure, saying he would call next morning as soon as he possibly could.

Belle, who knew the sudden developments and quick changes of Indian fever, dared not think what might happen before morning came. The sun might rise to find him him gore ; a new day might dawn upon a world empty to her. Seated beside him, her heart overflowing with tenderness, she heard him murmur disconnected sentences, in which her name occurred again and again, whilst he implored her to remember her vow, to keep her promise true, and then upbraid her with marrying | few days.'

lessen his fever by absorbing it in o her own system. Now and then their lean and brown skinned native servant came and went softly as a shadow, carrying cooling fanning the master whom he loved with the pounds, seemed made of silver; the great boulders of rock that rose here and there summit of the hill, whilst beyond lay the

From the dim room where she watched,

Outside the world was beautiful in the another man. Her angnish deepened promise you that he will, doctor cause of his distress, and because of her Belle said. own helplessness to make him understand "My dear lady, I take your word for that she was beside him, and would remain it,' he rejoined.

swered laughingly.

with a wild heart-throb she saw the fever our chaplain about the ceremony. He is

She strove to steady her voice and an-swer him cheerfully, but the effort was un-successful, and she burst into tears.

save you from uneasiness and pain.'

'Don't say that, ob, don't ray that, Hugh,'

'Yes, dear, you have,' she answered.

"Pon my word you have behaved ad-

"Pulse almost normal, though not quite;

'I suppose I may get up during the day,'

', If so it will be in disobedience to my

"I will see you obeyed, doctor,' re-

"You are qui'e an autocrat,' Hugh an-

'You must submit to my tyranny for a to speak of. We must remedy that.'

his patient looking so well.

he smiled at Belle.

said the patient.

marked Belle.

Hugh.

wishes.'

can.

can.

Hugh.

'I cannot help my thoughts, and it shared with you, Belle, they don't harass me half so much; so you had better let me talk. unless you want to play the tyrant too.'

15

'Poor little woman, poor little woman,' he murmured soothingly, as he stroked her 'Very well, dear; but there's no need to hand. 'I believe I have given you a fright. be anxious about it, the ceremony will be I, who would do anything in the world to gone through in good time,' she said, striving to soothe him.

'I have been nervous, dear; but I am 'I will have it performed the first hour. sll right now. Tell me, has your headache | the first minute, that the chaplain is free to say the words."

'Yes. dear; I think I am nearly well, 'I fear if you excite yourself you will not only a little weak. I must contess I was be allowed up the day after to-morrow,' she remonstrated.

'Whether I am up or in bed, it shall be gone through the instant the law allows us to become man and wife. Therefore you must tell Richards to have the chaplain here in good time. Richards is to be one of the witnesses you know.'

'I would not say it, but that the fever has 'Now rest, dear,' she said ; 'strive to put the subject out of your mind for the present.

'Yet I felt sure you were beside me all 'Don't you see. Belle, what importance the time, and that seemed to give me it is to you and your unborn child that this marriage should take place,' he said, his Whilst they were talking the doctor came colour heightening, his voice becoming irinto the room mopping his round boyish tace, that lit up with pleasure when he saw ritable.

'Of course, dear of course ; but for my sake say nothing more of it now,' she urged, and she playtully covered his mouth with her trembling hand. He remained silent mirably,' he said to Hugh. 'I may tell you I didn't expect to find you half so well; after that, but she knew what the tenor of but I know what your recovery is due tohis thoughts were, and she strove to disthe careful nursing you have received,' and | tract them by references to every day events and item of household gossip. "I believe you are right, doctor,' replied Some hours later he dosed only to wake up with a startled impression on his face. He inquired how long he had slept, and she temperature all right; not much strength told bim.

'Do you know,' he said, 'I thought the time had come for our marriage. Surely God would not punish us so severely by letting me die before I could make you my wife ?'

'Why speak of dying? You are better, are you not ?'

'Yes, much better. How strange that "Thank you, my dear lady; I am sure I should have thought the time had come you will be able to manage bim,' replied for our marriage, I must have dreamt it the doctor cheerily. "It's more than I whilst I selpt. "But the fever has gone,' protested

With a despairing heart she saw the fever had partially returned, and with all her strength she summoned courge and sought 'Not quite; it's intermittent. You must to calm him, and again he fell asleep, take every care of yourself for a few days. though now his slumber was continually You must have no excitement, nothing broken. She sent for the doctor, who must be allowed to disturb you; keep your came at once, but before his arrival the mind and body as tranquil as you possibly patient woke up and talked incessantly and incoherently of his marriage, and every hour his excitement increased. Two days later a little group had gathered round the bed of Hugh Gilbert, consisting of a heart broken woman, the doctor, Captain Rich-

PROGRESS, SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1896,

CHAPTER XVIII — PLAYING WITH FIRE. Sir Dick grows more in love with Lord Stanmore's wife which causes h s mother much uneasiress. Lord which causes hs mother much uneasizess. Lord Stanmore also notices the young man's infatuation and warns Belle against encouraging him. They dine at Hurst and Belle is presented to Mr. Trew-laney the view and Sir Dicks old tutor, and his daughter Amy who has known and loved Sir Dick Probyn from his boyhood as they have grown up together but who only regards Amy with a sist: rly affection.

CHAPTER XIX.—Sir Dick offers a diamond pen-dant to Beile but it is refused; she tells him that his confession of love must end a pleasant triend-ship and he goes home in despair. He decides that life is not worth livi g and attempts to shoot himself but his nother who had feared something and had followed him screams when she sees what he is about to do and the bullet goes through his cheek. Lord Stanmore believes Belle is to blame for encouraging Sir Dick and reads her a lecture which she resents CHAPTER XX .- An unforgotten face. Lord and Lady Stat more have an understanding and are better friencs. She tells him all about her inteviewed with Sir Dick. The Stanmore's get an in-vitation to a ball at Marchmont Court. They go and there Belle and Hugh Gilbert meet. After the shock has somewhat died away she enquires for his wife and learns that he has never been married.

CHAPTERS XXII-XXIII - The lost letters. Belle and Captain Gilbert have mutual explanations in which Lady Stanmore's treachery is revealed. Lord Stanmore is introduced to Gilbert and asks him to dine with them the following day. Belle accuses her aunt of destroying her letters and the latter ack-nowledges her guilt but nothing of the situation is told to Stanmore who receives Captain Gilbert very kindly and invites him to Scotland for the shooting season and at Belle's request the latter consents to CHAPTER XXIV .- Gilbert hears of Belle's acciden on the lake and of Stanmore's appearance on the scene in time to save her life and the result.

CHAPTER XXV.-The whole party go to Strat-hearn and are charmed with its beauty. A row on the lake and its result. The Marchmonts furnish their own shooting box and invite Gilbert to join them. He is inclined to do so as he does not teel at ease at Strathearn, but he and Belle discuss the matter and she requests him to stay for a few days more.

CHAPTER XXVI., XXVII.—A stray shot. Gilbert is wounded by a shot from Mr. Marchmont's gua. Belle hears the news and almost betrays her love for Gilbert. A doctor and nurse are summoned from London and the wound is pronounced not dangerous.

CHAPTER XXVIII.-An old friend. Belle makes many anxious enquiries about Gilbert and sends him a rose by Jim Marchmont. Lady Stanmore receives a letter from M. s. Marchmont who is expected in a day or two to stayat their new shooting box, in which she tells her that Mrs. Seymour is coming to stay with them at Glenwrath. She tells Felle and wishes her to go away with her during Mrs. Seymour's stay but Belle declines.

CHAPTER XXIX.-Mrs. Seymour. Lady Stan-more leaves Strathearn after first telling Lord Stanre of Mrs. Seymours expected arrival. The latter comes to Scotland and Belle meets her. Gilbert makes his first appearance downstairs since the accident and is received by Belle. He is still very weak and faints away while listening to Belle CHAPTER XXX.—A new fear. Stanmore and Sir John Lee discuss the Marchmonts who have called and persuaded Belle to accompany them to a pic-nic. Gilbert continues to improve and goes daily to Belle's boudoir for a cup of tea.

CHAPTEB XXXI.—A spray of heather. Gilbert is able to be out again and he and Bell have a walk on the terrace. They are joined by the Marchmont girls who have come to carry Belle off to a picnic. Lord Stanmore suggests to Jim Marchmont that it is time for Gilbert to leave Strathearn and be ac-cordingly makes preparent to go to Glenwrath cordingly makes preparations to go to Glenwrath for a time "That spray of heather shall lie on my breast after I am dead."

GAPTER XXXII.—A picnic. Bel'e overhears a erration between Mrs Seymour and Lord Stan-more, in which the latter says he regrets the mistake he made in marrying Belle. A storm comes up during the picnic party, and Belle and Gilbert take shelter in a cave CHAPTER XXXIII.-More than life. Belle and Gil bert have an interview, in which their flyght is planned. Stanmore discovers that Belle has left him and gone with Hugh Gilbert.

CHAPTEB XXXIV.-Belle's letter is received by Stanmore; she tells him now that she married him through pique and relates the deceit practiced by her aunt and its awful consequences. Stanmore tells Mrs. Seymour the news. Jim Marchmont defends Gilbert. Lady Stanmore receives a call from her byother-in-law in which he accuses her of her deception and they become enemies.

CHAPTER XXXV — A new light. The news of Belle's flight is heard at Hurst and Lady Probyn breaks the news to Sir Dick and also tells him of Amv Trewlaney's love. Sir Dick proposes to Amy and is accepted.

you unhappy?

'No, dear; I was merely thinking of how much I have missed in all the time I was parted from your of the treachery of the woman who spoiled my life to gratily some whim, to avenge some slight of her own. Surely, hers is a crime gleater than mine,' she burst out, passionately.

He passed one hand soothing'y over the head laid upon his shoulder. 'Let the past be forgotten,' he said; 'and let us value the present. We are happy now; is not that enough?'

'Yes, dearest; that is enough,' she almost sobbed. In the silence that followed the stir of palm leaves could be heard quite close; further down came the chirrup of some insect amongst the yellow flowers whilst far away towards the south they caught the faint sound of the ocean, as it lapped the long stretch of black and yellow shore.

As they sat there, sufficient in themselves for each other's happiness, creators of the love-lit world in which they dwelt, he suddenly shuddered.

'Do you feel cold, dear?' she asked anxiously.

'No, only some one has walked above my grave.

'Hugh, dear, don't say that,' she protested.

'No, we are going to live happily for evermore.

'In a few days the law will graciously permit us to become man and wite, for it is six months, all but a few days, since Stanmore got his divorce. I wonder if he will marry again?'

'He was always kind to me,' Belle said reflectively

Hugh shuddered again.

'You must not sit here longer,' she remarked. I hope you have not taken cold already,' and rising, they went into their sitting-room, his arm around her.

·Sing me something, dear,' he said to her, opening the piano, for her voice had a charm for him that was indescriable.

She sat down to the instrument and struck a few chords, then, through the balmy stillness of the night, her voice came clear and sweet, as she sang the opening bars of Robin Adair. Lying on a couch, he listened to her, strangely moved and wonderfully soothed, until suddenly her voice broke into a sob; the music ceased, and she covered her face with her hands. In a second he was beside her, his cheek laid against hers.

'What is it, dear, what is it, Belle?' he asked tenderly.

'Nothing, dear, only I am weak and nervous to night. Forgive me, I was foolish to cry-only-only the tears would come. could not keep them back.'

'They are not tears of sorrow ?'

'No, no; only tears of joy.' 'Then let them flow,' he said, and he issed her fondly. Next morning at breakfast her watchful eyes saw that he looked pale, that his eyes looked heavy and dull. The minutes that elapsed before the 'Are you not well, Hugh ?' she inquired. doctor arrived seemed long as hours. une wen, dear 'But you are so pale,' she persisted. 'I have a headache; I suppose it's caused by yesterday's heat; but it will be nothing. 'Every English resident at Malabar Hill, he was familiar with all the incidents of the history of this man and woman. Though CHAPTER XXXVI.-HER ANSWER. 'Tell me, Hugh, tell me what are you thinking of, dear,' Belle said, interrupting a long pause. 'My thoughts are always occupied by one I fancy we are going to have a change of well acquainted with the former, he had weather. When the wind comes from the never seen the latter before, and was im-I fancy we are going to have a change of well acquainted with the former, he had person,' he answered, and taking her band, west we shall be much cooler. Oh, for an mediately struck by the grace and beauty he raised it to his lips. English breeze, for a cloudy sky.' of her face and figure, but mcre still by Knowing that she was watching him closely he strove to eat, but he had no ap-petite. When the meal was over he lit his valid. 'Dearest,' she whispered, just above her breath, every letter of the word sounding as delicious music in his ears.

never happy for long in his absence. Her restlessness increasing, she again stepped into the verandah, in the hope of catching sight of him, when she saw him far down the road. She was not sure at first it was he, for he walked slowly and as wih an effort and looking again she saw he was not alone. He was leaning on the arm of a friend, Captain Richards, who had frequently been their guest.

As he caught sight of her, she could see that he made an effort to resume his usual gait, and as he came near, she realised that drinks he had prepared, or noiselessly though his winsome grey eyes were heavy and dull, their expression sought to reasabject devotion of a slave. sure her that there was nothing amiss with him. He called out to her, when she went serenity of moonlight. The bungalows surrounded by their white walled comtorward, and laying one hand on his arm, looked searchingly into his flushed and weary face.

'What is it, Hugh ?' she asked, in a low, lost something of their grimness ; tall palm nervous voice, 'Only one of my old headaches, dear,' he responded. "The fact is,' volunteered Captain Richards, striving to speak cheer'ully, 'the heat has been too much for him, and so I octan, scarce stirring in its sleep, its violet thought I would run up with him, you see.' 'Thank you so much,' Belle said. surface stretching into limitless space.

Hugh sat down heavily on a couch, and placing his elbows on his knees covered his face with his hands. She touched his forehead with one of her cool palms, and then turning round said,

'His head is terribly hot.' 'It will be nothing, dear. I shall be all right when I have rested here in the shade with you,' Hugh answered.

With a world of concern in her eyes, she looked enquiringly at their visitor, who answered her unspoken question by saying, 'I wanted him to see the doctor but he wouldn't. It wouldn't have done any barm, you know.'

'I will send for him at once,' she said. 'Belle, dear, there is no necessity. You mustn't alarm yourself. I shall be all right in an hour or so,' Hugh said unwilling that she should distress herself.

'Yes, dear, but it will do you no harm to see him,' she answered, soothingly, and was about to summon one of her servants when Captain Richards offered to send the doctor up without delay. 'That will be very kind of you,' she answered, 'and pray beg of him to come at once,' she added anxiously.

When he had gone, and she was alone with Hugh, she knelt on the floor in front of him, gently removed his hand from his face, and kissed his forehead. He looked at her a second, as if he tailed to recognize her, but it was only for a second, for immediately his tired face brightened, and he placed one hand heavily on her shoulder. 'Don't be frightened, dear,' he said, noticing the look of vague terror in her eyes. 'It's only that my head is bad,' and his words were followed by an involuntary

She led him into his room, which was carefully darkened, made bim lie down, and began to bathe his temples. The while she dared not think, so crowded by apprehensions was her mind. Once or twice she had spoken to him, but it was evidently by an effort he had answered her, words, and she teared to disturb him further, lest any strain might have an injurious effect upon Lim. Never had his headaches been so bad as this.

with him faithful and true so long as life Then promising to send up some mediremained to her. For hours she held one of cine, he was about to leave when he heard his burning hands between her own, hoping that Capt. Richards and ano her officer that in some dim way she would had called to inquire for Hugh. make him realize her presence, and perhaps

"I won't have them admitted,' said the doctor. 'You see I am not going to have the name of a tyrant without exercising my tyrany. I'll take these young men away with me, and tell them how you are on the road.' Saying which, the cheery, bustling little man left the room.

"How is he? Richards asked the doctor as they got beyond ear sound of the bungalow

"As weak as water,' replied Malone. ', Poor chap! You don't think there's any danger ?

'Not unless he has a bad return of this tress stocd out dark and well-defined fever; remember this is the third attack against the light, their shadows falling on and every time it comes it's harder to shake masses of brambles or across the white preoff. I hope for his own sake, and for the cipitous road that wound its way to the sike of that poor girl, he may recover." As the doctor spoke all his cheerfulness seemed to have vanished, and an unwonted gravity settled on his round good-natured face. 'And to think that old painted har-

Belle caught a glimpse of the white splen-dour of the night, which re-called to her ridar, the Msjor's wife could say such things of her,' he added presently. the hours of silent happiness, when she had watched the scene outside with the man be-'Some women are bitter bad to each other, anyhow. God forgive them!' Whilst the doctor and his companions side her whose sympathy read her thoughts before she had time to express them. How were walking down the white dusty road, the sun pouring down on them, a conversation was being carried on in the sick man's happy they had been, what dreams they had dreamt, what a future had they painted for themselves ! Surely He who holds lite and room death in His hand would be merciful and 'I have but one anxity in the world, not visit her with punishment because she Belle,' Hugh said.

'I know, dear; don't let it disturb you, she answered, striving to assume an air of cheerfulness.

'The day after to-morrow I shall be free to make you my wife. It seems so near us but a few hours, and yet it seems a terrible way off.'

you,' she said, as she tent over and kissed

'No, I feel it relieves me. I did not tell man bending anxiously above him, [and 'you, dear, that I have already spoken to

TO THE MARK.

In all diseases that affect humanity there is some weak link in the chain of health, some spot that is the seat of the trouble. It may be the liver, it may be the stomach; perhaps it is the bowels or the kidneys; most likely it is the blood. Burdock Blood Bitters goes straight to that spot, strengthens the weak link in the chain, removes the cause of the disease, and restores health, because it acts with cleansing force and curative power upon the stomach, liver, kidneys, bowels and blood.

With good red blood health is assured, without it disease is certain to come and Burdock ards, and the Chaplain, the Rev Meredith Jones. The fever had apparently gons, but not before it had done its fatal work in wasting all his strength. At long intervals he roused himself, when his mind seemed perfectly clear and active. He then invariably sank into deep lethargic sleep, from which those who watched him feared he would never wake.

Three hours before, on recovering from a loag and protound slumber he had asked if the time had not come when his marriage might take place, and on being told it had he inquired why the parson was not present. That was just in the first flush of dawn, when the stars had begun to tade, and the gold to glow, low down on the horizon. They told him the chaplain had arranged to be with him by eight o'clock, but Hugh insisted on having him sent for at once, he would now brook no delay. Long before Mr. Meredith Jones arrived the patient had been overtaken by one of these deep sleeps which the doctor well knew were the forerunners of that deeper sleep from which there was no awakening. The chaplain however, remained, as did the doctor and Captain Richards, all patiently waiting the moment when Hugh Gilbert's trail lite might kindle to a flame or go out for ever.

Belle stood bending over him, watching his every breath, a pitiful tragic figure, already crushed by the desolation which she knew was about to befall her. Dr. Malone with a deeply grieved face stood at the other side of the bed, his fingers on his patient's pulse, his eyes watchful, his ears strained. Suddenly he mide a motion. and then called on Gilbert loudly, when the dying man opened his eyes that at first were dim and vacant. As they rested on Belle's face they brightened with intelligence, then became anxious and looked around. Bending down the dector told him the chaplain was here, when the patient drew a long breath and smiled faintly. But when he would move he was unable to stir, and his eyes turned imploringly to the doctor, who passed his arm under Hugh's shoulders, gently and carefully raised him. 'For God's sake be quick,' the doctor said to the chaplain. In a moment the latter had opened his book and began the first words of the marriage service, Bel'e standing mute and terror-stricken by his side. The dyirg man raised his eyes to hers, eyes in which shone unfathomable love, undying tenderness and proud satisfaction. She took his hand which was already cold and clammy, when, as if overcome by the happiness of seeing his hopes realised, he closed his eyes and sighed profoundly.

'Will you, Hugh, take this woman for your wife ?' the chaplain asked, but the words remained unanswered.

.Will you, Hugh, take this woman for your wife ?' he repeated in a louder tone, and bending forward as he spoke. 'He is dead,' said the doctor, layirg Hugh Gilbert's body back upon the pillews of the bed.

A deep silence fell upon the room, the men reverently dropped on their knees, for they now stood in the presence of the Great Creator, but Belle remained standing, her speechless lips parted, her eyes staring, her body quivering. Suddenly the parson began a prayer which was broken by a piteous cry, that came straight from a wom in's broken heart :

'Hugh, Hugh, wait for me, wait for me, I will come with you !' she said, and then

'Don't speak of it, Hugh, it only excites to a deep calm sleep, from which he did not awake for hours. When eventually he his forehead. opened his eyes they met those of the wo-had sinned; surely He would leave her this one life which was all the world to her. Her lips were motionless, but her soul was full of prayer that petitioned, and pleaded with all the force of her strength, with all the hope of her faith, that the one creature she valued on earth might be left to her. When morning came Hugh tell in-

BLOOD BITTERS is the only remedy that will positively remove all blood poisons. In ulcers, abscesses, scrofula, scrofulous swellings, skin diseases, blotches, old sores, etc., B.B.B.* should be applied externally, as well as taken internally according to directions.

before those nearest could catch her, she had fallen senseless to the ground. (To be Continued.)

10 CTS CURES CONSTIPATION AND LIV-ER ILLS .- Dr. Agaew's Liver Pills are the most perfect made, and cure like migit, Sick Headache, Constipation, Billiousness, Indigestion, and all Liver Ills. 10 cents a vial-40 doses.