grade is the best-that's the kind we use. The excellence of ivory is in it's whiteness, fineness of grain, the absence of streaks and its ability to retain color.

The poorer grades of elephants' ivory come from high and dry re-gions, where the ivory has blueish streaks and turns yellow with age, while the best grades come from the hot, low, damp districts, where the effect of environment is to produce ivory of very fine grain, of purei't white, and which grows whiter with time. The latter is the only kind used in the Pratte Pignos. Come into cur warerocms and you can see samples of various grades of ivory.

The handsome ivory keys of the Pratte Piano are in keeping with the excellency of its fitish in every part.

A large number of the citizens of this town and visitors took adval tage of the day, by taking a trip across the water. The day all through was a very pleasant one, but I must say, it was much n ore pleasant on our return for a young couple, who had been united in the bonds of matrimony, but it wss not known to any on board until the next morning. When it was made known by Capt. J. O. Reid that he had wedded Miss Louisa Elliott of this town, it could hardly be credited at fi st, but later it was found out to be a fact. HAPPY COMPANIONSHIP.

VISITING IN INDIA.

The Maldens Sejourning in That Country May Count on Having a Good Time.

"Missy Sahib, chota lazri tayar hai" (breaktast is ready), and the daughter, who has just come home to join ter father or mother in the far East realizes that at last the long sea voyage and land journey are over and her first day in India has really tegun.

A dusky, white-robed ayah has brought a tray, with tea, toast, and fruit to the bedside, and pulled up the white net curtains that protect the sleeper from the bloodthirsty mcsquito, and now waits to assist at her mistress' toilet. It is 6 o'clock and

She also begins to real ze

a sense of her own importance, for in India sle is distinctly a personage, and women are probably at a higher premium there than in any other civilized country. The arrival of a new "spin" (as the unmarried girl is colloquially termed) is the cause of much excitement in an Indian station, and everylody is on the alert to see the latest addition to feminine society. The day usually Legins with a visit to the badminton courts, and there the girl will run the gauntlet of criticism from a large portion of her neighbors, for it is a favorite meeting p'ace. The ladies eagerly scan every detail of her dress; being fresh from home she must, of course, have the newest fashions, and later on they will ask her for blouses, & ..., as patterns. There are also plenty of candidates of the opposite sex eager to teach her tadminton, and every one's racket is at her disposal. At o'clock it is too hot for further play, and they drive home for bath and treakfast. The bath, with its water cooled in large earthenware jars, is delightfully refreshing, and the thin mug wherewith to bale it over one's person is a distinct novelty. Breakfast is a meal of many courses, commencing with fruit. After treakfast the housekeeping has to be seen to, and this seems an easy matter to the girl accustomed to that duty at home, for it simply consists of giving orders to the numerous servants and dealing out the tinned "Europe" stores. Then there are flowers to he arranged, and at 12 o'clock callers begin to arrive. The servent on the veranda inni?. dulged in.

After tea everybody gces out. They drive to the band s'and, where the regimental band plays; there is lawn tennis for the energetic or garden parties at the club or mess house, and the new arrival will be struck by the all-pervading air of luxury. Servants are in constant attendance, the carriages are filled with comfortable cushions, and every tennis player has a small dark boy at his elbow ready to hand him balls. At 8 o'clock dinner takes place, and when there are no dances or evening entertainments everybody goes to ted early. Certainly the daughter of India has a really good time. Invitations to dances, dinners, and entertainments come rapidly for acceptance, and if she can ting or act she will be in great demand. Everywhere the preponderance of men strikes her and they vie with each other in providing her with amusements. At the races and shooting matches they ask her to "nominate" them, when if her nominee wins, she will receive the prize. The constant balls and dances are rendered gay by innumerable uniforme, and the large proportion of men makes that hardy perennial, the wallflower, an impossibility, and every girl with the faintest idea of dancing has her card filled to the twentieth extra.

Before the hot reason with its scorching winds makes an exodus to the hills she will have bad several proposals to exchange her position of daughter for that of wife, for though 'spins' on their first season are plentitul, those in their second are rarer and these in their third are hardly to be met with. Marriage is thriving in India in spite of the vanishing rupee.

She will win the hearttelt gratitude of the chaplain's wife by interesting herself in the Sunday school for soldiers' children and visiting their mothers in the regimen'sl lines. Then, sgain, if she takes the trouble to study the language and learn more than the few sentences required for ord ring servants it opens up a world of interest too little known to Eur-opeans.
