HUMAN NATURE IN A COUNTRY P. O. The Postmistress Draws Inferences and Arrives at Conclusions.

'I have an aunt,' said a well known Rochesterian the other afternoon, as he sat in a down-town office to wait until the n't he write?' worst of the rain had passed over, 'who is hamlets in western New York. A beautiful town it is, I tell you, nestled amid vineclad hills and bold scenery. It is an ideal place for a summer's vacation, as it stands at the foot of a pretty lake, whose waters stretch away for miles, and upon whose waves many a moonlight ride can be en-

The men who were gathered in the office applauded the beauty of expression into which their triend had tallen in his poetic fervor for the place of his aunt's nativity. It was declared by one that to have an aunt who lived in such a town was better far than to wear a crown, whether of

'Yes,' replied the eulogist, 'it is a great joy. To have an aunt serenely abiding in such a lovely place is more than falls to the lot of any of you ordinary mortals. But to have an aunt who is Postmistress as well as resident-that is perfectly entrancing. I have been down to see her lately, and I spent one or two mornings with her behind the little boxes into which the mail of the inhabitants is placed. Of course, she knows every one, and almost all of them have a Euphrates to the Nile.

word of greeting for her.

'You must get quite an insight into the affairs of this neighborhood,' I said to her one day, 'handling so much of i's correspondence.' 'Yes,' she said. 'I know a good deal that is going on. I cannot help it. Many of the letters which go through my tands tell their own story without opening them. It is all stamped on the outside. I get very familiar with the handwriting of these people about me, and this fact often reveals to me some plots and schemes which the writers tancy are profoundly secret.

You interest me greatly,' I said. 'Lawyers, doctors, newspaper men, and business men have their secrets,' she went on, and Post Office officials have theirs also. I think, however, ours are guarded the best, because the law compels us to keep our mouths closed.

There comes a girl now,' she exclaimed to the Upper Falls on Monday evening Sept. 21st | as she looked out of the window down the street. 'Now just watch her when she comes in. She will carry a very anxious look on her face until she sees there is a letter in her box, then just notice how her expression changes. She will go and peek at the letter first, and when she sees it is from him-from the young man-she will give one little subdued exclamation of joy. and ask me for it with a face wreathed in mor, Mrs. A. Baldwin, Mrs. H. D. Wallace, Mrs. | smiles. See if I have not described her

> 'Of course I was deeply interes'ed, and secured a point of view where I could observe the young woman closely. True enough, she came in with a most preoccupied look on her face, as it she were debating whether she dared to hope for a letter; She went directly to the box which interested her, and when she saw the letter which it contained a little smile rippled over her face which made me tell both guilty and euvious as I watched from behind the scenes. Then she raised herselt on her tiptoes, screened ber eyes wi'h her bands, and carefully examined the directions on the envelop. When her heels touched the floor again a look of such ecs'asy swept over her countenance that I was for going out and congratulating her on the spot. A man feels like throwing up his hat in the air and shouting hurrah when a girl beams like that, no matter if the lucky man is miles away. But the post mistress frantically motioned for me to keep quiet, as she went to the delivery window to wait on the young miss. Up walked the girl as big as life, her face radiant, her eyes ful of a laughter which told the entire story, and her whole bearing that of a very satis

'The Postmistress handed the letter to her demurely enough, but it was pounced upon as if it were the rarest treasure on top of the earth. It went into her pocket atter the had given it one loving glance and then the girl dissappeared down the street, walking as if she was as happy as a queen

"She gets a letter about every day," explained the Postmistress, 'and she seems as arxious for every one of them as it it was the first in years. And when she expects a communic tien from that y uth and it does not come her face is a study, every particle of joy seems to leave it. You noticed how triumphantly she swaggered down the street just now I presume.

'It you could see her on one of the days when the coveted epistle does not reach her you would hardly believe it was the same girl. Slowly she drags herself. along, her head downcast, her eyes almost in tears, and you fairly hear her exclaiming out of her heart full of woe: 'Oh, why did-

What is the matter?' Not so very strange Postmistress in one of the prettiest little either. I used to feel that way myself once upon a time. There were lots of joy and sorrow, many heartburns and little quarrels, but after all it was very sweet to methose years long ago when he was young and I hought there was no one on earth his equal. It couldn't last forever could it? He turned cut bad, and has paid the

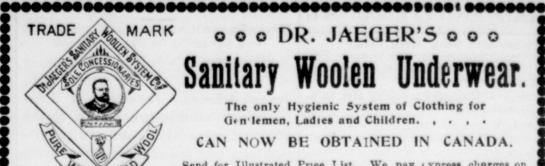

' See here, ' said one of the party, ' the skies are clearing, and it is time were all going, before you go any further in the affairs of the Postmistress. It is quite scandalous the way you are telling her

Yes, I have given you enough for today but there are a number of characters which I saw through the eyes of the Postmistress, and some other afternoon I will give you another one of them. '

And the part broke up with the understanding that the next story from the lips of the Postmistress should not be of love but something more blood-curding.
