NURSE AGATHA'S LOVE.

A group of three grown-up people and one little girl were seated at a side table during the luncheon bour of a fashionable hotel in the North of England. Judging from the merriment that proceeded from this particular table these four, though only acquaintances of a fortnight, seemed on a particularly friendly footing with each other. Now one was a fine-looking man, certainly past the prime of life, but still erect and soldierly in his carriage, and with the unmistakable bearings and manners of a gentleman. By his side sat a fair, slight young girl, with laughter-loving eyes, clear, fresh complexion, and a wealth of glorious, sunny bair surrounding the head like a nalo. Next to her came a dain'y little maiden of about seven, and opposite the trio sat a sedate-looking Scotch lawyer, quick and abrupt of speech, with a merry twinkle in the unusually bright eyes thrt showed he could be genial and merry enough when he

'This year, next year, sometime, never. This year,' commenced the child in her deliberate little fashion, as she ticked off the stones on her companion's plate.

'So you have finished at last, Yseult Then we will go and see it mamma is better and would like to take her drive.' But Colonel Arbuthnot qui tly inter-

'Oh, not just yet, Miss Escombe; do let us know what the fates have in store for you; please let Yseult go on with her fortune-telling. But the girl answered, gravely enough: 'Do you know, I never allow myself to think of love or marriage; such luxuries are for girls who have fathers, mothers, and a home already, and not for outsiders and wanderers like myself.'

But you are altogether so different,' commenced both gentlemen, simultane-

A grave, negative shake of the head was all the answer the girl gave, as, taking the child by the hand, she quietly left the table.

The two gentlemen were immediately joined by a fine looking young fellow, a late comer to the hotel, whose acquaintance they made the previous evening at the billiard-table.

'Who is she?' he asked, glancing eagerly at the attracting figures.

'A Miss Escombe from London.'

'And the child?' 'Her pupil.'

'Then she is only a governess?'

With a slight, dry little cough, the law-yer answered: 'Yes, only a governess: 'What a pity.' The quick ears of the lawyer caught the words, and he looked up quietly at his companion.

Love and marriage are not for her. And closed eyes, repeating the words slowly halt musingly. In my opinion the nicest again, and this time his voice was clear and

'And as good as she is beautiful, I am quite sure,' answered the colonel as be rose to leave the table.

was written :

'Colonel Arbuthnot. Westminster Palace Hotel,

The doctor turned to leave the room, but a fresh thought seemed to strike him at

'You can be ready in ten minutes, you say. I think I will wait and we can drive round together.' He loooked at the nurse John's and the greatet part of her income as he spoke, and noticed the almost more than usual pallor of her face. 'I fear I ought not to have chosen you,'

he said, kindly. 'The last case was an especially trying one, and you look quite worn-out already. But she answered, eagerly enough: 'It had two days' entire rest. I shall be ready in a few minutes.'

Three quarters of an hour later the doctor was leading the way into the sick man's chamber. The nurse followed slowly. There was a dull feeling of sickness at her heart, and she had a d fliculty in keeping down a lump in her throat, that seemed perpe ually trying to choke her. One glance at the restless suffering form on the bed, and she was herself again.

And then commenced a hand-to hand fight, lasting through weary days and wearier nights, with the grim enemy that awaits us all. How pitiful and tender she was, and yet with what courage did she dispute the ground, step by step, inch by inch, yielding only to conquer. Alas! in turn only to be defeated again.

But at length the pain and the restlessness were over aud he lay hour after hour, day after day, in a quiet state of exhaustion, seeming too weary to speak or to

The doctor came in late in the afternoon of an oppressively hot day and insisted upon the nurse going out for a little fresh air, saying he would watch by the side of his patient until her return. She would have protested, but he led her to the door saying quietly: 'You look quite ill, and I cannot have you tail me now, as you will be wanted at the end.' The closing of the door behind her seemed to arouse the colonel. He looked around, and as his eyes met those of the doctor, he commenced speaking eagerly: 'My lawyer, Mr. Cameron, called to see me last night. I have left her (glancing to the chair where the nurse usually sat) fifty younds a year How kind and patient she has been! But this kind of life is much too bard for her. You must see that she takes a long rest when I am gone. I have also lett money to the different hospitals.

There is not a medicine in use today which possesses the confidence of the public to so great an extent as Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. For more than eighty years it has stood upon its own intrinsic merit, while generation after generation have used it. The best evidence of its value is the fact that in the state where it originated the sale of it is steadily increasing.

Johnson's Anodyne Liniment

I. S. Johnson, Esq. My Dear Sir:—Fifty years ago this month, your father, Dr. Johnson, called at my store and left me some Johnson's Anodyne Liniment on sale. I have sold it ever since. I can most truly say that it has maintained its high standard and popularity from that this JOHN B. RAND, North Waterford, Maine, Jan., 1891. This certifies that Dr. A. Johnson, whose

It she form she loved so much, and the agony must be fought out and conquered silently. A movement from the sick man made her look up; he seemed wide awake now, and was looking at her a'most wistfully. 'Will you read something?' he asked, giving a glance at the Bible which lay at his side. 'Only don't choose anything; read just where you open. Perhaps it will answer what I want to know so mucq.' She took up the book and commenced: For in Heaven they neither marry nor are given in marriage.' The choking sensation was too much for her this time. She closed the book hurriedly, but he did not seem to 'The girl was right, you see, after all. notice that she had done so; he lay with vet, what a sweet face it is,' he continued, and softly to himself. Presently he spoke distinct.

'Do you know, as you have sat there you have reminded me sometimes of a lady met a few years ago -- only there was always a color on her face. She was dressed in the after we parted, and she must have heard simple uniform of the home, her face was of it somehow, for she wrote this letter grave and tender, but the eyes had a look | telling me how sorry she was; but I never answered it. How could I? My only safety lay in silence. She was so young and so beautiful, and I was already far on the 'Yes. I have a particularly critical case down-hill of life; but I loved her-God on hand just now, and I want you to help only knows how much!' He lay silent for me. We shall have a hard fight of it and I | a few minutes; then, raising bimself eagerfear it can end but one way; however, we ly, he turned to the nurse, holding out the letter as he spoke. 'I know I can trust you. This is her letter. Will you place it in my hands when I-am-dead?

She arose to take it, and as she sid so a glad happy cry escaped her, for she was holding a letter of her own. He looked Nurse Agatha took the card on which up. Could this radiant, beautiful woman with the happy love-light shining in her eyes be the grave, pale nurse that stood there a moment before? Her cap, too, had fallen off, and the slanting rays of the western sun lit up her hair like a golden glory. The recognition was mutual now, although, for this world, the knowledge of their love for each other had come too late.

The last time I saw nurse Agatha she still wore the uniform of the Home of St. was spent in works of charity. Her face was a shade paler perhaps, but the wistful look had quite gone from the eyes, and a glad contented light reigned only in its stead. She knew she had been beloved, and could now patiently await the life that lies beyond, although in Heaven they is only the heat, doctor. You forget I have neither marry nor are given in marriage. -Selected.
