Some Elegant Millinery Displayed To Admiring Moncton Ladies,

'This is the largest crowd we ever had, said Mr. Marr when called upon by a Times reporter last night A visit to the show room but THE TIMES man felt bound to confess that he never saw so many beautiful hats and bonnets in his life before, (and he has seen a few too.) No trouble has been spared by this firm to place before the ladies of Moncton the very latest styles | back, jumped as to seize the lion by the direct from Paris, London, New York nose, but the lion was too quick this time

The most popular being roses in ever color geraninm, lilac, lily-of-the valley, foliage, pelargoniums, violets are in strong demand and will be exceedingly stylish this season. Straw trimmings and chiffons will be extremely popular. For early spring trade the ever popular turban will again be paramount. In dress hats the styles shown decided change from last year, the hats being much larger. Sailors are quite large and becoming, particularly stylish when trimmed with flowers. Hat ornaments are steel, jet, crystal, rhinestones and pearl. Ribbons are wide and shown in all the new shades in glace, moire, satin, grass lawn, the newest way of using these ribbons is in high standing bows, in fact bows tied in every conceivable shape with ornaments of rhinestones, steel or jet. Nearly every hat has a touch of violet. Ostrich tips and feathers are much used, but flowers are given the preterence. The Leghorn hats are marvels ol beauty and endless in variety, perfect beauties all the way from Italy. We are safe in saying that they excel any ever shown this side of the Atlantic.

The weather which was anything but agreeable yesterday could not chill the interest of the splendid company that desired to find out what Marr's know about millinery. The question will be answered again to day. Paris, London and New York trimmed bonnets and bats, with a beautiful show room, a great combination, society, approves, larger cities envious. JACKALS KILL A LION.

They Pull Down and Eat a Desert King That is Too Old to Fight Them Off.

When a lion takes a walk in Africa or Asia it is followed commonly at a respectful distance by half a dozen jackals, which, not being strong enough to pull down game for themselves and yet eager to taste blood, go after the great still hunter of the desert in the hope of getting the drippings from its claws. The lion does not object to them, as one swing of its unsheathed claws teaches the venturesome jackal a lesson that may be survived but never forgotten

A large lion which had grown old and weak, losing teeth and litheness of limbs, as well as sharpness of vision, in the shrubbery which grows up in the southern parts and to the south of the Desert of Sahara, betrayed its failing strength one day last spring, and instantly the near-by jackals, which had been respectful, came forward on the run and gave Wilson James, an American hunter, a fine lion-baiting scene. The lion had sneaked toward a herd of antelopes which James was sneaking. It happened that the lion got within range before the man did, and leaped out a mediumsized buck, bearing it to the ground. The most astonishing thing that the man had ever seen then happened. The buck, a sturdy three-year-old, in the prime of life and vigor, rolled over, and in spite of the jaws and claws which the lion closed on it got out of reach, leaped to its feet and made off as only a scared, leanlimbed antelope can. The lion rose to its feet, lifted its head, and watched the fleeing animal join its comrades on a knoll half a mile away. Then down went the lion's head, and the big brute started to walk on across the open in which the antelope had been. The jackals, which had been creeping on their bellies before the leap was made, and had sat up to watch the result. started up the moment they saw the lion fail, and sprang after it with eager bounds, and howling as if on the trail of a wounded deer. Nine of the jackals appeared in the open, but others came from all directions, and all were howling. They began to circle about the lion, which had stopped to watch them with mane bristling and tail jerk: Gradu-I am pleased to learn that Mrs. D. T. Johnston ally the pack grew bolder. Some of the ing nearer each time, but leaping back quickly, One more venturesome than the rest nipped the lion's heel, and the big brute turned clumsily, too late to grip the daring dog. In its prime, the lion never allows jackals to come within ten feet of the meat it is eating, and kills those that do after the fashion of lions, but this one could not protect its own skin now.

First on one side, then on the other, came the jackals, snapping and even biting the big tellow. Little drops of blood trickled down the lion's heels. At last one of the jackals leaped to the back of the lion to Point de Bute to attend the funeral of Mrs. and was off and away before the brute could turn. James had heard lions roar at night and in the daytime because of love hunger, or wounds, but never such roars as those this lion gave. Neither did he ever hear more joyful howls or yelps from any of the dog kind than the howls of the jackals ready to pull down the lion, which was already weakening. The commotion had roused life for miles around. Jackals hurrying to the attack from their daytime lairs came for a mouthful. The screaming birds and carrion eaters hovered above, while all the clovenis a rare treat. Not only the largest crowd, hoofed animals grew uneasy and ceased feeding to look in the direction whence the

The end came suddenly. A jacka! which had made itself conspicuous by its daring, and supposed by James to have been the one that first leaped to the lion's and sank his teeth into the jackal's neck. The scene looked just like a beautiful Then the pack leaped forward all at once, lion. When the mound dissolved a few bones were left to whiten in the dry sunlight.

NAPOLEON'S HORSE MARENGO. He was Doubtle sa the Mos Famous War

Horse of the Cen'ury. The most celebrated war horse of the present century is unquestionably Napoleon's Marengo. In view of the many hundred biographies of the great captain, it is certainly surprising that so little should be known with any degree of certainty concerning this world-famous charger. To an American visitor to the dethroned Bonaparte at Chiselhust, in June, 1872, Louis Napoleon, in a conversation about his own horses and the war steeds of the most illastrious of modern soldiers, said: 'The Emperor's favorite charger was Marengo, an Arab of good size and style, and almost white. He rode him in his last battle of Mount St. Jean, where Marengo received his seventh wound. I once mounted him when a youth, and but a short time before the steed died at the age of 36. Another faverite war horse was named Maria, and was used by the Emperor in many of his hundred battles. Her skeleton is now to be seen in the ancient castle of Ivenach, on the Rhine, the property of the Von Plessen family. Of the other sixty or seventy horses owned by Napoleon and used in battle, perhaps the most famous were Ali, Austerlitz, Styrie, and Jaffa, He had nineteen killed under him.' The American visitor might have added, but he did not, that Marshal Blucher had twenty shot in battle, while Gens. Custer and Forrest are believed to have each lost almost as many in the brief period of four years. Maria, or Marie, is thus described by Victor Hugo in the words of a French veteran: 'On the day when he [Napoleon] had its ears very far apart, a deep saddle, a fine head marked with a black star, a very long neck, prominent knees, projecting flanks, oblique shoulders and a strong crupper. She was a little above fifteen hands high.' The Hon. Francis Lawley of London, possesses the picture of a white Arab stallion the history of which is wellknown, with the inscription in French, Ali, battle charger of Napoleon. Hs was captured from the Mamclukes and presented to the great captain. On his downfall a Frerch gentlemen purchased Jaffa Marengo and conveyed them to his estate in England. The tombstone of the former is to be seen at Glassenbury, in Kent, with this inscription, Under this stone lies Jaffe the celebrated charger of Napoleon.' The last trumpet call sounded for Marengo in September, 1829, just as he had completed 36 pears. After his death his bones received an honorable place in the military institute as already mentioned.

Another souvenir of the famous steed is one of his hoofs made into a snuffbox, which makes its daily round after dinner at the Queen's Guard, in St. James's Palace, London. On the silver lid is the legend: 'Hoof of Marengo, barb chargar of Napoleon, ridden by him at Marengo, Austerlitz, Jens, Wagram, in the Russian campaign, and at Waterloo,' and round the silver shoe the legend continues: 'Marengo was wounded in the rear hip at Waterloo, when his great master was on him in the hollow road in advance of the French position. He had been frequently wounded before in other battles.' Constant the Emperor's valet, says: 'He had a most ungraceful seat,' and Hugo's old soldier, in answer to the question how the great Corsican rode, replies: 'Badly. He did not know how to fall off, and so he never fell off.3

"Where Doctors Disagree."

There has been a great deal of disagreement from time to time about the thera poutic value of Sarasparilia. In the main, anthorities deny any particular medical value to the plant, "It's just an old wive's remedy," they say. And in the main they are right. There are about a dozen varieties of sarasparilla, scattered through various countries, and of this dozen only one has any real curative power. So a man whose experience might be confined to the other eleven varieties might honestly say there was little value in them. The one valuable sarasparilla is found in Honduras, C. A. Monardes, a physician of Saville, records the introduction of sarasparilla into Spain a result of the Spanish discoveries of the New World, between 1536 and 1545. But the root did not accomplish much. But he adds, "a better sort soon after came from Honduras." It is this "better sort" that is used exclusively in Ayer's Sarasparilla. And it is the use of this "better sort" that has given Ayer's Sararparilla prominence over all varieties by reason of its wonderful cares of blood diseases. SPORT WITH BROMBIES.

Hunting the Wild Horses That Roam Over the Australian Plains.

The brombie, the wild horse of uncertain origin, which roams the Australian plains, is hunted by the Australians for sport and profit. The brombie herds, of about a dozen animals each, are exceedingly destructive, and next to rabbits, are the most hated animals iu Australia.

It is supposed that these mustangs are progeny of the horses which from time to time have escaped from the ranches. The wild life has agreed with them and they have grown into a type nicely adapted to their surroundings. The stallion, which can trace its pedigree back through uncounted generations of the brombies, is a handsome beast, with a trim body, quivering muscles, and a gait exceedingly graceful, almost flying, the hunters of brombies say.

Arthur C. Stephens was once in a in the northern part of Queensland, on the shores of the gult of Carpentaria. A herd of brombies, six mares, three yearling colts and a cream colored stallion were damag.

others who helped drive the game. Jackie, when the party got to the plain, while yet a hill hid the view, cocked his head to one side, and with a gesture stopped the noise the riders had been making. Very quickly the party turned around a point of the hill, and there was the cream colored stallion, fifty yards away, head up and tail arched, with its family near by. The stallion started and away it went, the horsemen widening out in a crescent. One lassoer managed, at the expense of his horse's wind, to turn the stallion back to another lassoer, who, with his rope, stopped it. Jackie, after the stallion had got to its feet again with a blanket on his head, leaped to its back and jerked the blanket off. Then the animal danced a walkingbeam jig, trying in vain to shake the man off. At last it started away at full speed. The rest of the party captured the other animals, and when they got to camp were followed by Jackie on the stallion, which had become docile.
